OUSTER PROTESTS BACK WHITLAM

Australia in Turmoil

Times News Services

CANBERRA — Malcolm Fraser named a caretaker Australian cabinet today amid widespread demonstrations and calls for a general strike in support of ousted Gough Whitlam, ousted as Labor prime minister.

Slipping into Parliament house through a side door, Fraser's cabinet was sworn in while the chanting of pro-Whitlam demonstrators rang through the building.

Whitlam meanwhile, told a crowd of 3,000 in front of the building that his removal Tuesday by Gov.-Gen. Sir John Kerr "makes a travesty of parliamentary democracy in Australia."

Kerr also dissolved Parliament in preparation for election of a new House of Representatives and Senate. The election is to be held on Dec. 13, and the makeup of the new lower house will determine whether Whitlam, 59, returns to power or Fraser, 45, remains in office.

Informed sources in the ousted Labor government said today there was no doubt that if Labor is re-elected next month, Whitlam, would demand Kerr's resignation or dismiss him out of hand.

Under the Australian constitution, however, the government has no power to abolish Kerr's office without a national referendum amending the constitution.

As the Queen's representative, Kerr bestows commissions on all elected ministers, including the prime minister, and is considerd the guardian of the Australian constitution.

The unprecedented decision to oust Whitlam touched off street protests, wildcat strikes and political mud-slinging.

Militant union leaders declared war on Fraser and urged workers to take to the streets around the country to protest against his Conservative Party government.

But businessmen in Sydney toasted the fall of Whitlam's Labor party government with champagne Tuesday and the stock market scored its biggest one-day gain in a year.

Whitlam met his closest advisers today to arrange his campaign intinerary for next month's election. Fraser had a busy first day in office planning tactics with Conservatve leaders.

The governor-general said he replaced Whitlam with Fraser because of the ousted prime minister's refusal to resign or call new elections after the senate turned down the 1975-76 budget.

The rejection of the budget and Whitlam's insistence on staying in office touched off a month-long constitutional crisis that left the treasury short of money for welfare and government paycheques.

Whitlam, in a foretaste of the political mud-slinging expected during the campaign, said Fraser would go down in

Creighton To Quit United Way

Hugh Creighton, executive director of the United Way in Greater Victoria, confirmed today he will leave his position at the end of the current campaign.

Creighton, 39, and a chartered accountant, said he would rather not comment on reasons for the move now. He has held the post for 3½ years.

"My concern right now is we have a successful campaign. That's the important thing because it affects all the agencies," he said.

The annual campaign, which this year has a target of $650,000 in support of 24 agencies, is currently under way and lagging behind.

Oak Bay Ald. Shirley Dowell, president of United Way, said today she got Creighton's letter of resignation in September and she understands he is resigning because he wants to move into a vocation where he can stay for the rest of his working lifetime.

There's never been any conflict between him and the board. He's worked well with the board," she said.

The matter of Creighton's impending resignation has not been brought up by her before now, she said, because it is the middle of the current campaign "and in case people read something into it that wasn't there."

Teenage Curfews Imposed

Times News Services

SURREY — This community and Maple Ridge have each imposed 11 p.m. curfews on teenagers.

Violation of curfew in each town carries $5 fine.

The curfew here applies to 15-year-olds and under. The one in Maple Ridge to 17-year-olds and under.

Surrey council also voted to ask the provincial government to remove the $5 fine limit to permit a more reasonable penalty.

The bylaws permit police to take curfew offenders to their homes or to jail for a couple of hours.

Surrey council also voted Tuesday to halt welfare payments after two weeks instead of the present four weeks for employable welfare recipients who are awaiting unemployment insurance benefits.

The action followed a report from Mayor Bill Vander Zalm which said welfare rolls in that Vancouver suburb have increased 65 per cent since last fall.

The number of applications for welfare is phenomenal, he said, and due largely to the high rate of unemployment.

Council was told the reduction to two weeks from four weeks could save the municipality $20,000 a month.

Candidate Platforms

Platforms of candidates involved in civic election campaigns for the regional board, Sidney mayor's seat and Sooke School District are detailed on page 5, 58 and 59 today as part of the Times series on the civic election.

Policies of the six people squared off in the Esquimalt aldermanic race are reported on Page 42.

October Jobless Rate Stays at 14-Year High

OTTAWA (CP) — The national unemployment rate remained virtually unchanged at a 14-year-high in October, although it jumped in five provinces.

The B.C. jobless rate dropped one percentage point to 8.6 per cent but the number of unemployed was 97,000 up from 72,000 on October 1974. The provincial unemployment rate one year ago was 6.5 per cent.

Statistics Canada reported today that 7.2 per cent of the labor force was unemployed in October, the same percentage rate as September.

It was the eighth consecutive month the rate has been more than seven per cent, the worst jobless level in 14 years. It is widely predicted to get worse before it gets better.

There were fewer seeking work in October, but also few jobs were available.

On an actual basis, 576,000 persons were officially unemployed in October.

On a seasonally-adjusted basis, the jobless rate for those 24 and younger increased four-tenths of one percentage point to 12.9 per cent. The rate declined however to 4.9 per cent from 5.2 per cent for men aged 25 and older and dropped to 4.2 per cent from 4.6 per cent for women of the same age.

Among the increases for the five provinces, the sharpest jump was in New Brunswick, where the rate rose by 2.2 percentage points to 12.6 per cent.

Newfoundland retained the highest jobless level in the country at 19.6 per cent, up from 18.8 per cent in September.

The rate remained steady in Alberta at 3.4 per cent — the lowest in the country — and in Ontario, where it stood at 5.8 per cent of the labor force.

In Quebec it declined to 9.1 from 9.3 per cent.

The Saskatchewan rate jumped 1.6 percentage points to 3.5 per cent; Manitoba was up one-half a percentage point to four per cent and the Nova Scotia rate increased to 8.5 from 8.1 per cent.

POTASH TAKEOVER

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan's New Democratic government announced today that it will soon move to acquire ownership of at least half and possibly all of the provincial potash industry, using expropriation if necessary.

"I am confident that in the years ahead this will be seen as one of the best investments the people of this province have ever made," Premier Allan Blakeney told reporters as he commented on new policies outlined in the throne speech opening the province's 18th legislature.

The premier said the takeovers would certainly exceed $500 million and could approach $1 billion, depending on the compensation that is arbitrated and the actual number of mines acquired.

BeCems Backs CUPW

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

B.C.'s emergency mail service (BeCems) will be abandoned if the federal government doesn't start bargaining in better faith with striking postal workers, organizer George Ferguson of Victoria said today.

Ferguson, who started BeCems Oct. 21, said he is "ashamed of my government."

He said the postal workers are becoming whipping boys of the government in its attack on inflation. The public has been "led along a path of subtle dishonesty."

"I don't believe the average citizen is aware of the plight of the postal workers in their struggle with the government for a fair wage settlement."

He said his mail service was intended to merely fill a short-term gap. He believed at the time a settlement would have been worked out within days of the calling of a strike.

"However," he said, "the government through Postmaster Bryce Mackasey has determined to deal postal workers a severe blow."

He said that on Monday he contacted Stan Darlington, Victoria president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, and offered once again to turn his business over to the strikers.

He said Darlington appeared pleased to receive his support, but he demurred on the question of taking over BeCems.

The postal union has steadfastly refused to become involved in private mail services because it believes that would weaken its position and prolong the strike.

Darlington was in Campbell River today and not available for comment.

Ferguson said he would make available to the union all of the profits from his mail service which in the past week has mushroomed.

He noted that on Monday alone he received orders to deliver 12,000 pieces of mail for two Victoria businesses. The total exceeds the orders BeCems received for the first four days of last week.

He said his company is deli-

Letter Carriers To Deliver Cheques

Times News Service

The post office will call in letter carriers for at least one day to ensure that millions of federal cheques are delivered in areas where people receive home delivery.

The post office confirmed today establishment of the contingency plan to distribute the cheques within the next two weeks if the current postal strike continues.

Those who get mail at post office boxes or general delivery are advised to pick up their cheques in the normal fashion.

A post office spokesman said the cheques have been split into two groups, the first of which is in the hands of the post office today. They would be distributed to provincial capitals and would be ready for delivery by Nov. 19.

The first group of cheques which should be delivered or available for pickup by the end of next week includes old-age security cheques, Canada Pension Plan cheques, RCMP pensions, MP pensions, judges' pensions, armed forces pensions and public service super-annuation cheques.

The second group, to be available for delivery or pick-up on or about Nov. 26 includes family allowance cheques, war veterans' allowances and miscellaneous government cheques.

The cheques will be delivered presorted to the post office by the department of supply and services and then distributed to provincial capitals. From there they will be sent to the city, town or area of final destination, the post office spokesman said.

He said sorting will be handled by supervisory staff or by Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) members who have crossed picket lines.

Meanwhile, the post office reported more CUPW members had returned to their jobs and letter carriers were being called back to work in centres in Nova Scotia, Ontario and some western centres where inside workers have returned. 'Eighty-four post offices, mostly in small centres, were reported open compared with 68 Monday.

Gals Who Wear Glasses . . .

TORONTO (CP) — Nancy Gelfand, 26, of Montreal was told by an Olympic Games official last week that she would not be hired as a hostess for the games because she wears glasses, according to the Globe and Mail.

The newspaper quotes Mrs. Gelfand, a bilingual master of arts student, as saying that when she became angry at the employment interviewer, he told her the official policy was also against hiring unattractive women.

However, Orphila Plouffe, director of hostesses, said an applicant's appearance is not particularly important, and that there is no official ruling on glasses, the newspaper said.

It says Mrs. Gelfand was particularly angry at the interviewer's decision because she worked as a hostess at Expo '67 in Montreal and fulfilled all advertised qualifications for a games hostess.

The newspaper quotes Richard Carriere, employment interviewer, as saying that Olympics officials frown upon hiring bespectacled women because uniform hats do not look attractive with glasses.

NO HOPE FOR CREW OF LAKER

SAULTE STE. MARIE, Mich. (UPI) — Searchers all but abandoned hope today of recovering the bodies of 29 seamen lost in a Lake Superior storm that sank the oil carrier Edmund Fitzgerald.

A winter storm carrying four inches of snow and 50-mile-an-hour winds slowed the air and sea search for victims of the Monday night disaster, the worst on the Great Lakes in 17 years.

Slide Hits Pt. Alice

A mud slide struck the mill town of Port Alice on northern Vancouver Island shortly before noon today but an early report from RCMP there said no one was killed or injured.

Rayonier operates a mill in the community of about 1,800 and a company spokesman said the slide came after five inches of rain in the past 14 hours. Rain was continuing to fall at the rate of half-an-inch an hour.

Details of where the slide hit or the amount of damage weren't available but the spokesman said part of the town had been evacuated to a community centre so a head count could be taken.

A similar mud slide caused an estimated $500,000 damage in December 1973, without injuring anyone.

Gorst Dumped in Bitter NDP Meeting

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Incumbent Esquimalt MLA Jim Gorst was dumped from the NDP slate at an angry, often bitter nomination meeting Tuesday night.

By a margin of eight votes, party members decided to drop Gorst in favor of 43-year-old Esquimalt police sergeant Frank Mitchell, who will now face Social Credit nominee Lyle Kahl in the Dec. 11 provincial election.

Kahl, a 36-year-old schoolteacher, won the Socred nomination Monday night in a seven-way fight which saw former Esquimalt Socred MLA Herb Bruch defeated on the first ballot.

Gorst, who ended Bruch's 19-year term as MLA in the NDP's 1972 election sweep, seemed a little surprised and hurt at his own defeat Tuesday.

Telling reporters later he did not want to do more damage by discussing the bloodletting, Gorst then went on to say the meeting had obviously been orchestrated.

"Nothing just happens — everything is orchestrated. If you want to be king or queen you have to do something — dethrone someone," he said.

Throughout the three-hour meeting, Mitchell and other party executive accused Gorst of not serving his constituency well, of not answering telephone calls and mail, not dealing with local problems and not attending executive meetings.

Gorst said he had helped "thousands of people" in the constituency and called the charges "innuendo and half-truth . . . undocumented, unsubstantiated and unfounded."

Premier Barrett and NDP president Yvonne Cocke had nothing to do with the upset, said Gorst, despite Mitchell's reference to phone calls from both party officials assuring him they were not opposed to a contest because "the membership must decide who has the credentials to run."

Gorst said he did not know what he will do after Dec. 11, when he ceases to be MLA for the area, but pledged he would work for Mitchell's campaign "if asked."

He called on the audience to get behind Mitchell but his words were barely heard as his angry supporters left the crowded Esquimalt Recreation Centre auditorium.

The vote was 74-to-66 and crowd appeared fairly evenly split between the two men during the speeches and half-hour question period which was studded with cat-calls and jeering as Mitchell supporters, mostly party executive members, queried Gorst's performance.

One woman angrily asked Mitchell about his departure from the party in 1969, when Gorst first got the NDP nomination, and Mitchell admitted he became inactive at

Gov't Moving Cheques

The provincial government is moving to distribute thousands of cheques piled up in the finance department because of the postal strike.

Finance Minister Dave Stupich said today the government has decided to distribute cheques worth $20,000 to $25,000 to government agents around the province and suppliers can pick up cheques from those outlets.

In Victoria, companies and people owed money by the government will be able to pick up cheques at the legislative buildings but should phone the finance dearment first.

Since the postal strike began three weeks ago the government has made arrangements to distribute payroll cheques, Mincome and social assistance and other pension cheques but has held off paying its bills for fear of strikebreaking.

Four Victoria members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers crossed their picket line and reported for work this morning.

Post office spokesman Buz Sawyer said the four were part of the day shift, made up of 89 CUPW members.

They are the first postal union members in the city to break ranks and return to work.

It is possible that more post office employees could return on the afternoon shift.

A CUPW spokesman in Victoria said the union was issuing no comment on the back-to-work move.

In Regina 25 inside postal workers, lunch boxes in hand, crossed the picket line around the post office about 9 a.m. today and returned to work.

The returning workers, about 10 per cent of the inside workers here, were greeted with shouts of "scab," and there was a brief scuffle at the door when CUPW local president Mark Behrns, tried to bar their entrance.

The move followed a meeting here last Friday during which it was believed about 50 of the postal workers voiced discontent at the refusal of their national executive to hold a vote on whether they should return to work.

Members of the Vancouver CUPW local, the third largest local in Canada, voted Tuesday 90 per cent in favor of reminaing on strike to back contract demands.

Pete Whitaker, union local president, said he was happy with the results. The vote was taken at a meeting of about 900 of the local's 1,400 members.

Whittaker also said some members at the meeting wanted the vote to be conducted by secret ballot, but it wasn't.

The Vancouver local will now take out a loan for financial pressed members to assist them until the strike is resolved on the national level.

In Ottawa, the post office reported 80 workers out of 1,100 had returned and letter carriers and mail service couriers were delivering 95,000 items sorted Tuesday by workers who crossed picket lines. An average day's sorting with full staff is about 463,000 items.

Jean-Claude Parrot, CUPW vice-president, said his union will continue to allow letter carriers to cross the picket lines and report for work. The letter carriers would be ineligible for unemployment insurance benefits if they refused to report.

Parrot said the post office now is putting pressure on supervisors to sort mail.

About 20 members of the SUPW Ottawa local demonstrated outside headquarters of the Association of Postal Officials of Canada urging supervisors not to perform CUPW functions.

Al Gammon, national director of the postal officials association, said supervisors are not sorting mail.

The post office estimated that nationally 3,200 of 22,000 CUPW members are back on the job but a union spokesman called this figure "patently untrue" saying it was less than half that figure.

He also challenged the post office figure for the total number of post offices open, saying "just because a few workers go back doesn't mean they're open."

ASSAULT CHARGED

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of the Vancouver local of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, Peter Whitaker, was charged Tuesday with common assault.

The charge was laid by Max Jacobson, post office personnel manager.

Jacobson said he was punched in the back as he crossed a picket line around the Vancouver main post office Monday.

Whitaker is to appear in provincial court Dec. 4.

vering extensively for such companies as Shell Oil, Suburban Motors, Island Business Machines, Standard Furniture and many doctors and lawyers.

He felt the service he offers is still too expensive, particularly on the national level where the charge is a flat $5 a letter.

For that reason he'd like to see the postal workers organize their own service because it would cut costs, put the posties back to work, and generate good public relations for the Union members.

He feared the public and the postal workers are being alienated by "a very, very well-oiled PR machine from the federal government.

"The government is using every tactic it can to break the back of the union."

The principal barrier to a settlement is wages. The government has offered a 37 per cent increase over 30 months; the union which originally sought a 71 per cent increase has cut back its demand to 51 per cent.

A spokesman for the union in Victoria said the government's proposal would mean inside workers would get the same wage offer as outside workers yet the job classification schedule requires inside workers to receive a higher rate of pay.

Esquimalt NDP

that time because he disagreed with the choice, but said he always continued to vote NDP, an obvious reference to Gorst's long association with the Liberal party.

Mitchell said he has been a CCF member and then an NDP member since he was a small boy. He was elected Esquimalt MLA under the CCF banner in a 1951 by-election.

He was re-elected in 1952 and defeated in 1953 when Bruch came in with the Socred sweep.

But Bruch was barely in the running Monday night when 451 Social Credit delegates gathered for their nominating convention.

Nine Socreds were nominated at the crowded, noisy meeting, but two dropped out, throwing their support for other candidates. Five were eliminated in the first ballot.

That gave Kahl 174; retired businessman Eric Butler 145; Byron Barker 45; Bruch 24; Jack Fry 22; Stockwell Day 21; and Ken Warren 1.

In the second round Kahl edged out Butler 219-214 and took the nomination with a promise to campaign for better roads in the area, a hospital in the western region and more help for loggers and miners in sooke and Jordan River.

A teacher at Rockheights Elementary school, Kahl described himself as both a businessman and a union member, and said the NDP must be defeated to return power "to the people.';

It is Kahl's first attempt at political office.

Bruch's nomination appeared to take some of the audience by surprise and he said he decided to run at the urging of some younger party members last weekend.

"I make no apologies for being part of the old government. We had one of the best governments you ever had or ever will see," he said.

Tuesday marked the second time Gorst had been dumped at a nomination meeting.

In 1968, as a long-time member of the Liberal party, Gorst won the nomination for the federal riding of Esquimalt-Saanich but his election was overturned by the party executive who termed the nomination meeting, where he was chairman and scrutineer, as "unconstitutional."

A new nomination vote was held but Gorst angrily withdrew part way through that meeting leaving the nomination to David Anderson who subsequently won the federal seat.

Following the meeting, Gorst left the Liberals and a year later won the NDP provincial nomination.

Acclamation For Sanford

Karen Sandford won the NDP nomination in Comox by acclamation at the party's constituency meeting Sunday.

The Comox MLA elected in 1972 by defeating former Socred municipal affairs minister Dan Campbell, was unopposed.

The Liberals in that riding have nominated Campbell River banker Norman McLaren and Courtenay lawyer Victor Stephens is the Tory contestant.

Seven candidates are fighting for the Social Credit nomination to be held Sunday at 1 p.m. at Courtenay junior high school.

In North Vancouver-Seymour, Jack Davis, former federal Liberal cabinet minister, has won the Social Credit nomination and will compete with NDP MLA Colin Gabelmann in the election.

Davis, defeated in the 1974 federal election after 12 years in Parliament, was unopposed in his bid for the Scored nomination.

He has called for unity among the three private enterprise parties in the riding, which had been a Liberal stronghold for years before Gabelmann slipped in in 1972.

Australian history as "Kerr's cur."

About 2,000 longshoremen and shipyard workers marched through the streets of Sydney, demanding Whitlam's reinstatement. They invaded the stock exchange, swapping punches with police, but no arrests were made.

In Brisbane, 4,000 demonstrators clashed with police in the main city square.

Bus drivers in Canberra went on strike. So did the government's chauffeurs, and Fraser and his cabinet had to use their own cars or take taxis to get to Parliament House to be sworn in.

Bob Hawke, president of the Australian Labor party and leader of the powerful Australian Council of Trade Union, again appealed for the workers to keep their demonstrations peaceful. His deputy, Jack Edgerton, also appealed for restraint but said: "In any other country they would have blown up Parliament House by now."

A strong southwesterly flow of mild wet air will continue through Thursday. The present weather pattern will persist with most of the rain confined to the south coast. Occasional rain will move into the southern Interior with showers of mixed rain and snow across central areas of the province. Pollen Continues CS Attack

Mayor Peter Pollen said today that few people really seem to have grasped the point he tried to make last week, in criticizing provincial civil servants who offer themselves as candidates for the provincial election.

He had termed the two men seeking the NDP nomination in Victoria as "overwhelmingly unqualified," and one of them — Gordon Hanson, administrative assistant to Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young — subsequently asked if selling cars was any better qualification for elected office than civil service employment.

But, in responding to Hanson's comments today, Pollen said he was neither attacking the civil service in general nor questioning the particular intellectual or other qualities of the candidates concerned.

"My strong criticism was based upon a conviction, or recognition if you like, of our historical standards as established in the British governmental system: that is, that civil servants, be they geniuses or not, should stay out of politics," he said.

"If you politicize your civil service you have an extremely bad situation, and the British have recognized this for hundreds of years."

Pollen noted that the pitfalls and dangers are also recognized in B.C. at the municipal and school board level — a teacher, for instance, can't seek election as a trustee in the school district in which he is employed — and he doesn't see why the principle shouldn't be applied even more vigorously at the federal and provincial levels.

Yet there is in Ottawa today such a high degree of "cross-fertilization" between the upper echelons of the public service and the Liberal party that at times the two appear almost indistinguishable from each other.

Cabinet Slashes Gas Royalties

A new system of petroleum royalties which will effectively reduce the royalty rate from an average of 48 per cent to 37 per cent has been established by the B.C. government.

A cabinet order made public Monday decreases royalties on future oil production by about 40 per cent and sets up a credit system to return a portion of royalties on old oil to companies starting new exploration work.

Director of mineral revenues Bill Ross said the royalty reductions will cost the provincial treasury about $4 million in revenues, decreasing expected returns from oil production to $42 million from $46 million.

But if oil producers respond to the changes as expected, B.C.'s petroleum production, which dropped about 25 per cent in the last year, is expected to climb again from 1.1 million to 1.3 million barrels monthly.

The changes are the result of a report by the B.C. Energy Commission in August which recommended both natural gas and petroleum producers be allowed a higher net return.

Under the new royalty formula, all oil from wells completed after Oct. 31 will be subject to a royalty rate equal to about 60 per cent of the rate for oil oil.

Royalties on petroleum are based on a complicated sliding formula with a lower rate for the first 500 barrels produced each month, so it is difficult to compute what the actual average rate of royalty will be on future gas production, said Ross.

The royalty on old oil, produced from wells completed before Oct. 31, will be reduced slightly but more importantly, the government will hold in trust a portion of the royalties equal to 75 cents for every barrel produced.

Ross said if a company does exploration work it can earn back some or all of the trust funds.

Averaging out the effects of the changes and assuming they will spur new exploration, the average royalties paid on current production will be reduced about 11 per cent from 48 to 37 per cent, he said.

Midnight Deadline

Registration for the Dec. 11 provincial election closes tonight for all ridings in the province with registration possible up to midnight at Victoria's electoral office.

The registration is for those who have moved since last voting day Aug. 30, 1972, or who have turned 19 since that date.

Registration centres have been established in department stores and shopping centres in the Greater Victoria area and these will close at normal business hours today.

The main registration centre will be open until midnight at 933 Yates. Phone numbers are 387-5083 and 387-6609. Its normal closing hour was 9 p.m. but will remain open later tonight to handle last-minute changes in the list.

Mercenaries Marching On Luanda

LUANDA (UPI) — The two-day-old Marxist government in Luanda fought off an attack today by oppisition forces.

Rival troops attacking from the north and south threatened to choke off the city.

Military sources here said troops of the Soviet-backed Popular movement for the Liberation of Angola beat back a mortar-supported assault across the Bongo river on Quifangondo, 12 miles north of the capital.

Diplomatic sources, however, say an armored column led by 1,500 white mercenaries and former Portuguese officers is advancing from Porto Ambiom, 150 miles south of Luanda.

The column is headed for Dondo, a control point for Luanda's hydroelectric power supply about 100 miles southeast of the capital.

The fall of Dondo would choke off Launda's vital services, leaving its government at the mercy of its enemies, because opposition troops attacking from the north are already within mortar range of the capital's water supplies, the sources add.

There are also unconfirmed reports that the Marxist forces in Luanda are being reinforced by Cuban troops.

Who's in Centre?

Some commentators — and certainly Bill Bennett — argue that the Social Credit party in British Columbia has been transformed from a right-wing grouping into a moderate, centrist coalition.

"Under Bill Bennett the hot-gospellers and the rednecks have been packed off to the fringes of the party's right wing," said The Globe and Mail last week. "Bill Bennett has moved the party from the right to the centre," said Nick Hills, the Southam news service man in the west.

While performance in office is probably the best test of where a political party places on the spectrum, there have been some indications that perhaps Bennett himself is way out in front holding down central ground but many of his followers are still fighting old battles off stage right.

For example, last week Saanich and the Islands MLA Hugh Curtis trotted out Rev. William Mundy, who was a member of the NDP and CCF for 20 years, a former candidate in federal and provincial elections for the socialist party. He read out to the assembled press "the personal opinions of an ex-socialist." Mundy is convinced the NDP is carrying B.C. down the slippery path to Russian totalitarianism.

"The situation is identical to that in Russia with the politburo in power, far above the people," he said. The NDP is being dominated by "totalitarian Marxist theorists," according to the gospel of Mundy.

Presumably, Curtis believes the same thing. Why else push Mundy forward? Is this what Bennett privately believes too, but is too shrewd to say so in public? He hasn't repudiated Mundy's wild nonsense, or bothered to rebuke Curtis for appearing to give Mundy's incredible opinions the stamp of official Socred approval.

Another small indicator of what a large body of Social Credit members think came in the speech of John Goult, unsuccessful candidate for the party's Oak Bay nomination, when he said Social Credit had to root out "the socialist viper at our neck."

Too many Socreds see this election as "the holy crusade" against the godless socialists, as W.A.C. Bennett once put it. There are enough issues on which to conduct a strong campaign without dragging in red herrings and stupid slurs. It should be seen for what it is, a contest between parties who have a genuine difference of opinion on certain policies. But nowhere is there evidence for throwing around mud such as the two examples cited.

And speaking of mud, the contributions of a NDP candidate nominated on the weekend don't do much to elevate the tone of the campaign either. Joe Chesney, who will challenge Socred MLA Bob McClelland in Langley, said Social Credit is "the vaudeville act of Buffalo Bill and the three stooges." With Frank Calder switching from the NDP to Social Credit, added the radio station owner, "it looks like the act has now been joined by Tonto."

For the amount of gratuitous insults and racial slurs packed into one paragraph, Chesney's little gem would be hard to top.

Hopefully, both parties will exercise a little more control over the crazies and weirdoes in their ranks.

Day of Reckoning Coming

Premier Dave Barrett had no official comment on the switch of longtime NDP member Frank Calder to the Socreds, but privately he must be relieved at getting rid of a man who was a political thorn in his side, and the cause of no small embarrassment as well.

But he shouldn't think that the one cause Calder stood for all his 20 years as an MLA—the right of B.C. native peoples, specifically his own Nishgas, to their aboriginal lands—now will fade away. His government stalled and stalled for more than three years, before finally giving way on one small part of the land question, the so-called cutoff claims. The larger issue remains, however.

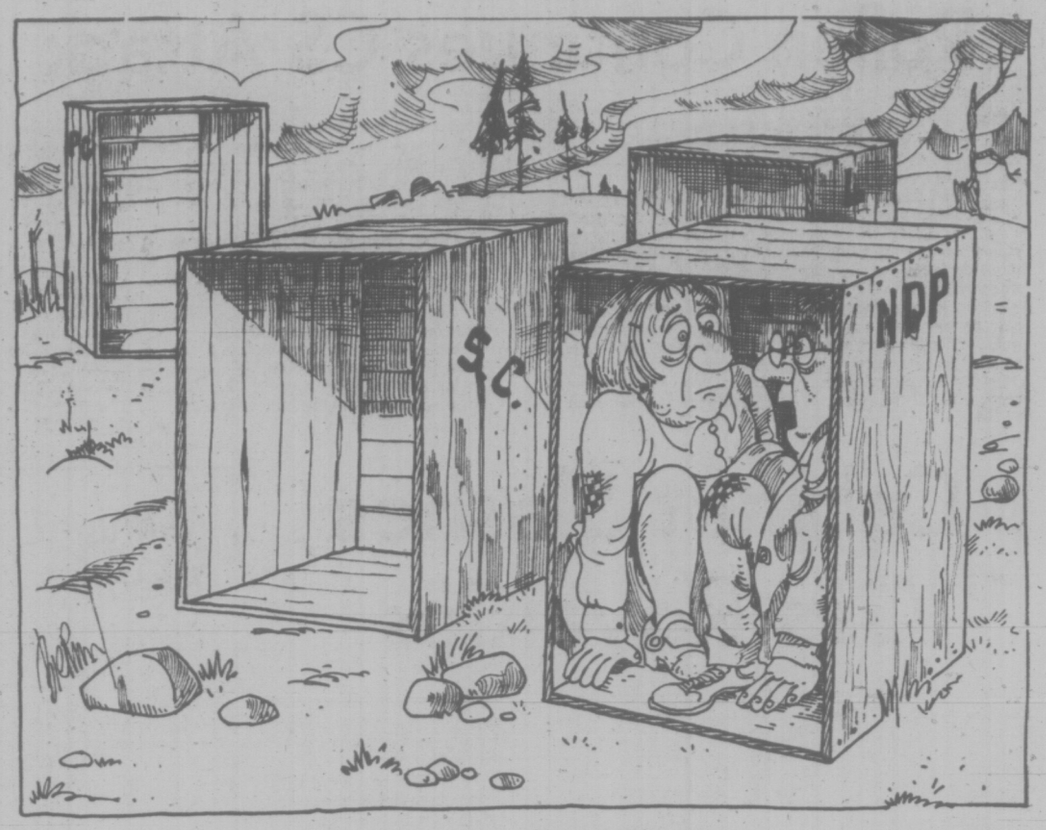
And Calder's crossing party lines will only highlight the matter as an election issue. His example may also be followed by enough Indian voters to make a difference in ridings other than Calder's constituency of Atlin, where the Nishgas vote as a bloc. For Social Credit has adopted a more liberal policy on the issue than the NDP, professional friend of minorities and the downtrodden.

Calder provided further example, if any were needed, of B.C.'s foot-dragging on Monday with the release of correspondence between the Nishgas, Prime Minister Trudeau and the premier's office.

Calder wrote to Barrett on June 9 this year asking his comments on the Nishgas' plans to transfer responsibility for programs from the Indian affairs department to the Nishgas themselves. This is planned as a prelude to negotiations on the land claims. To date, Barrett hasn't bothered to reply.

It's not as if the Nishgas haven't carefully and laboriously tried every other avenue of redress. They were active early in this century until the senior government banned political activity by Indians. Then through the 1960s and 1970s, the Nishgas fought the issue through the courts up to the supreme court of Canada, which produced a split decision.

Their patience running out, the Nishgas are going ahead on their own. They will close a key bridge on their land which the government-owned Cancel needs for access to timber lands. Maybe this kind of economic warfare the NDP will understand, since all appeals to justice and fair play have failed.



"... would you care to try another box? ..."

PAUL WHITELAW

361 People on U.S. Death Row

WASHINGTON — Although the United States supreme court ruled more than three years ago that the death penalty was "cruel and unusual" punishment, the decision has done little but prolong the agony of 361 prisoners now living on death row in American prisons.

Despite widespread public misunderstanding, the justices of the high court did not abolish capital punishment in 1972. Rather, they ruled merely that the arbitrary and uneven way in which the death penalty had been administered up to that time was discriminatory.

The decision involved only the state of Georgia, but it effectively barred resort to capital punishment in all parts of the country.

Thirty-four states have since responded with new laws that purport to eliminate the unevenness of death-penalty enforcement, with the result that the lives of those prisoners on death row are once again in the hands of the supreme court.

In a case which is certain to create another precedent, lawyers for a 26-year-old black murderer sentenced to be hanged in North Carolina are asking that the justices abolish capital punishment once and for all.

Heated Debate

Lawyers for Jesse Fowler, who shot a companion to death in an argument over $10 during a dice game, are asking the court to rule that such punishment is, by definition, "cruel and unusual" by modern day standards.

The eighth amendment to the U.S. constitution bars "cruel and unusual punishment."

Whatever decision the court reaches is certain to spark a heated national debate, for capital punishment has generated as much controversy here as in Canada where a bill to abolish the death penalty is to be introduced in parliament soon by Solicitor-General Warren Allmand.

Members of the U.S. congress are more fortunate than their parliamentary colleagues, because of the American tradition of referring such decisions — essentially a moral and political judgement more than a technical legal question — to the supreme court.

There could, however, still be some fireworks in congress. An omnibus bill to modernize the U.S. criminal code — including provisions or mandatory death sentences for such federal crimes as treason and airplane hijacking — comes up for a vote next spring. A supreme court ruling in Fowler's favor will preclude any debate over the capital punishment provisions of the federal bill.

But the court — which was originally scheduled to issue a ruling in the Fowler case last June — has postponed a decision until later this fall. There has been no indication that there will not be further delays.

Because the internal deliberations of the nine supreme court justices are only rarely made public, it is uncertain whether they have overcome the problems that caused the first postponement.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT
. . . black on death row in U.S.

Among the issues that may have caused the delay were:

- The failing health of Associate Justice William O. Douglas, who has not fully recovered from a stroke suffered last year.
- A feeling that the case was badly argued by at least one of the sides, which could result in a decision to hear the case again.
- Or tactical considerations in the part of at least one justice — the desire to have more time to persuade his colleagues that his position is correct, or perhaps, to await a change in the composition of the court.

Such a shift could occur if Douglas' health takes a turn for the worse, although he is considered a potential "swing" voter in the Fowler vs. North Carolina case. In 1972, when the court split 5-4 on capital punishment, he and Associate Justice Potter Stewart wrote that the death penalty was unconstitutional only because it had been arbitrarily imposed.

Only two of the five "majority" justices wrote that they felt the death penalty was unconstitutional by definition. Another justice, who voted with the majority in 1972, argued that since the imposition of the death penalty had been left by state legislatures to the discretion of juries, the court's ruling did no real damage to legislative intent.

The four justices who voted with the majority faced no ethical dilemma. Their interpretation simply held that capital punishment is neither "cruel" or "unusual" in the constitutional sense, and that individual states and juries should be free to determine its application.

Even-Handed Justice

There is no apparent way the court can rule against the death penalty for Jesse Fowler without holding it unconstitutional at all times and under all circumstances. In so doing it would frankly state that the will of elected legislative bodies must yield to judicial re-interpretation of a constitutional amendment against "cruel and unusual" punishment adopted back in 1971, when capital punishment was commonplace.

While more than half the states have passed laws to restore the death penalty as a constitutional punishment, California has moved in the opposite direction. Despite a strong sentiment in the legislature in favor of retaining capital punishment, the state supreme court ruled it unconstitutional.

The California court concluded, however, that the death penalty might be approved in the abstract, it would not be "acceptable to an informed public were it even-handedly applied to a substantial proportion of the persons potentially subject to execution."

RICHARD GWYN

What's a 'Fair' Income for All?

OTTAWA — The tension was obvious, an outward aggressiveness and defensiveness that reflected, at a guess, an inner anger, nervousness and, most of all, plain and simple frustration. "You guys with your microphones and pencils," said postal worker Alan Hamilton. "What do any of you know about bringing up six kids on $9,400 a year?"

A postal worker for 16 years, Hamilton had come from his home in Orleans, Ont., to take part in the demonstration on Parliament Hill. He rested his placard — Ten Months Without a Contract — on the ground and answered the questions of a pencil-wielding reporter.

"Teachers, I figure, make $12 an hour when you break it all down. What makes them worth that and us $4.50 an hour? Are the schools these days run any better than the post office?"

Average Stayed Same

Two formal phrases exist to describe what Hamilton was talking about. One is "income equity" — good wages for unrewarding, routine jobs like sorting mail as much as for high-status ones like teaching. The other, coined recently by Arthur Smith, chairman of the Conference Board of Canada, is "income compression" — the narrowing of differences in incomes, regardless of whether this is or is not equitable.

Everyone making a fair bit more than $9,400 a year is convinced that his income is already being compressed. We blame unions and believe, as an article of faith, all those stories about the newly impoverished middle class.

The problem, precisely, is that everyone making around $9,400 or less, is as firmly convinced they are falling behind.

To prove the case either way is impossible. National revenue statistics on occupational incomes are out of date. Anyway, they show a mixed pattern. Over the five-year span, 1968-73, doctors dropped a trifle, from incomes 5.15 times the Canadian average to incomes 4.9 times as high. But lawyers, dentists, accountants and investors all improved their relative positions. Employees as a whole, with average incomes of $8,568 in 1973, stayed in exactly the same relative position on the income ladder throughout the five-year period.

Cash income, anyway, is an uncertain guide to a person's standard of living. Take taxes, for example. These rise as do incomes, which is only right and proper. So also, though, do the tax loopholes become larger. In 1973, four individuals managed the heroic feat, according to the national revenue department, of earning incomes of $200,000 or more without having to pay a cent of tax.

To determine how much everyone, or at least every group, really is making would force us all to be inquisitors. What value would you put, for example, on a postal worker's half-hour cafeteria lunch compared to an executive's two-hour, expense account dawdle over martinis?

POST OFFICE STRIKERS
. . . outside Toronto main office

Even if the information could be gotten, it would help little. The nub of the problem is to decide how much everyone should be making. For that, a Solomon is needed. Probably he wasn't as smart as the bible portrays. Certainly, he doesn't exist today.

Suddenly, income equity has become our central political issue. The warning signs have been evident for some time. The steep rise in the number of strikes, both legal and illegal.

There is public anger — because the cost has to be paid in higher taxes — at civil service salaries. The rash of stories about the impossibility of getting plumbers, electricians, television repairmen, or doctors, to call, and then of the quality of work done when they finally arrive.

The government's wage and price controls program has brought the issue into sharp focus. The program's goal is to check inflation, not to promote income equity. "It can't do everything," as Prime Minister Trudeau has said.

Income equity, however, both in appearance and in substance, is essential if the controls program is to have any chance of success. This is because the government now is responsible for the incomes that individuals make.

Learn a Trade

The pulp and paper workers, for example, base their claim for a 41 per cent wage increase on the record profits of the paper companies. Without controls, the paper workers would have come close to their own target. Unless exempted they now can gain only 10 per cent.

The government today is both compressing incomes — which may or may not be equitable — and stretching them out. The controls program sets an absolute maximum of $2,400 on wage increases and so is supposed to allow those behind to catch up. That should close up the income ranks, a little. At the same time, the amended Unemployment Insurance Act will impose a tax of about $170 a year on everyone, whether his salary is $9,400 or $94,000, and so fall hardest on those with low incomes.

The government, it is clear, doesn't know what it should be doing. Let's not pretend that anyone else does either.

Hamilton's oldest son is 16. Would he want him to become a postal worker? "Well, no. The job of a postal worker isn't bad. But I think he should learn a trade."

Asphalt Architecture

The unwarranted destruction of a Maclure house on Burdett is another example of how the community at large suffers from the negligence of both the municipal and provincial governments. It also shows one of the least desirable aspects of unbridled capitalism.

By concentrating on tour-de-forces such as the Government Street mall and the restoration of the parliament buildings, both governments are creating highly visible political hay by upgrading the urban environment. Who can quarrel with such admirable schemes? Unfortunately they divert attention from the very real tragedy that is being committed on the side streets and back roads of the city as building after building is irretrievably destroyed, and worst still, destroyed unrecorded.

Victoria has two things upon which it bases its fame and fortune, the weather and the architecture. Thankfully the one is still beyond meddling with. The other, barring a few set pieces, will soon cease to exist if the present rate of demolition continues.

The current piecemeal approach to the environment of the city — both governments shirking their duty at one time, arguing at one another, making policy out of political expediency — creates the perfect smokescreen for the apartment and parking lot kings to continue to vandalize our city.

We deserve more than a few acres of blacktop in exchange for a Maclure original. — Tom Palfrey, 3158 Jackson Street.

Unity With Whom?

On a free-time political television program on Nov. 1, the Social Credit Party was represented by two converts, MLAs Hugh Curtis and Pat McGeer. They communed pleasantly together about their present party, were mildly critical of the parties which gave them their legislative status, and were more critical of the provincial government. In the course of the dialogue Mr. Curtis made a claim that is, to my mind, wide open to question. It was to the effect that "the Social Credit Party is offering unity which the others aren't."

Unity with whom? Unity with what? Unity for what purpose? He did not say. However, if Mr. Curtis should happen to refer to the so-called "talks" when there was an interest in a three-party joint effort for the good of British Columbia, then his claim is arrant nonsense, for it is surely recorded that neither the Social Credit party is offering unity which the their leaders would submerge their own personal or party ambitions for this purpose. Dr. Scott Wallace, leader of the Progressive Conservative Party received no support whatever and was the only one to put province before person and party. — H. M. Woodward, Brentwood Bay.

Land Use Is Regional Theme

A year ago the Capital Regional Board produced the grand design — the official regional plan — on future use of land. Now the finer details are being drawn in community plans.

Concern over land use is a common theme among candidates for seats on regional board this year.

In the seven electoral areas which form the suburban and rural parts of the regional jurisdiction, there will be election contests in only four — Colwood, Langford, Metchosin and Sooke.

On the Outer Gulf Islands, board chairman Jim Campbell was re-elected by acclamation, as were George Heinekey on Salt Spring Island and Mrs. Pat Massy in View Royal.

Here are the electoral area candidates and their platforms.

SOOKE

ERNEST L. KNOTT, 55, of 4810 Sooke Rd., woodworker, married, three children.

He says he would like to see the Sooke area grow in the style and direction it is now developing, but in a controlled manner, with some industry based on wood and fish and as a retirement and recreation area.

Good planning is needed to protect the area's present character and the draft community plan now before the regional board should be implemented for a start, he says.

"This plan with regional and provincial help will serve our areas needs without incorporation and its added expenses and taxes."

Among priority questions facing Sooke and area residents are sewage and waste disposal, which need careful study for selection of the best option and to ensure no further pollution of harbor and basin.

Knott says another priority is land and housing at a price people can afford.

"We are going to need improved transit service. I think the cost of widening the Sooke Road would be prohibitive . . . so we should take a hard look at reactivating the CN rail bed from Sooke to Victoria."

CHARLES PERKINS, 65, of 7188 West Coast Rd., retired lawyer, married, one child.

"Change is on the wind in Sooke," says Perkins, "and we must meet it with a clear conception of what we want or we will have to accept the sort of community that chance and outside developers make of it."

He says a major step has been taken by the regional board with preparation of Sooke's community plan. Now that plan must be implemented in stages, beginning with the areas most likely to attract development.

Sooke is an active community with a clearly discernible character. Its regional director should be sensitive to this and willing to foster those things which preserve the rural charm and village atmosphere while encouraging desirable development and healthy business activity.

Perkins says he will support what he sees as community demands — expanded care and housing for the elderly and better health care facilities for all.

"We have made a beginning in the selection and preservation of park lands but most of what has been is for the benefit of outsiders," he says. "While Sooke benefits incidentally, we need additional outdoor recreational facilities tailored specifically to the needs of local people."

BEDE STENNER, 35, of 6737 West Coast Rd., laboratory manager, married, three children.

Stenner says he personally favors incorporation for Sooke and would like residents to accept a referendum on the question and make a decision on local control before the matter is settled for them by outsiders.

Taxes totalling $1.75 million were assessed in the Sooke electoral area this year "and I have not seen anything near that figure put back into Sooke."

He believes Sooke residents deserve some tax accountability and also claims they are saddled with an unfairly weighted proportion of the school district's taxes.

Residents must face the question of local control, Stenner says.

"The community plan will be passed soon and the question of zoning will follow. Will we allow the core municipalities to zone Sooke?"

He says the present is a crucial point in time in the development of Sooke "and the regional director will need the drive and energy he can muster. I can fill those requirements. There will be continued communication between the people of Sooke and their director."

METCHOSIN
(one seat)

J. M. (MAC) TIPTON, 42, of 777 Winfall Rd., works in the provincial lands department and is a part-time farmer, married, three children.

Tipton is Metchosin's alternate member on the Capital Regional Board and he is following the resignation two months ago of director Ken Rainey.

"Metchosin must retain its rural atmosphere and distinct identity," he says, "and there should be local participation in planning."

He says he believes in participatory democracy and that one accomplishes more by working with people and government than by working against them.

His community service record includes being chairman of the Metchosin Ratepayers Association and a member of the Juan de Fuca and St. Mary's Priory Hospital Boards, the Centennial Pool Commission and the regional board as director and alternate.

Ecological awareness must be emphasized in sewage and waste disposal through the Capital region, he says. He wants a reduction in the bureaucratic red tape between citizens and government.

Tipton says he has been working for years for the establishment of hospitals in the western sector and believes that progress is at long last being made.

JOHN WATERSMAN, 35, of 731 Walpole St., real estate salesman, married, three children.

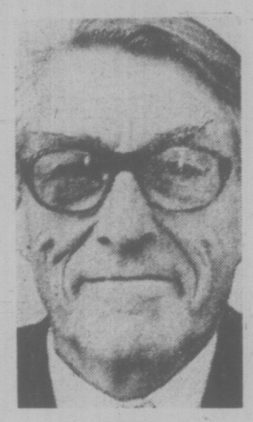
President of the Metchosin Ratepayers Association, Waterman says there is growing concern over mismanagement and arbitrary tactics by the regional board.

"Virtually no zoning or plannnig good has come from legislation and bylaws enacted by the board," he says. "Some, if not all of the employees of the board practise bureaucratic tactics to the utter frustration of all who must deal with this agency."

Waterman says there are solutions to all the problems "but I believe the present directors no longer wish to play watchdog over the planners and assorted employees for fear of alienating them — and so have lost sight of the fact they are and must be answerable to you and I as taxpayers."

He lists these points in his election platform: support for the sancity of Metchosin's boundaries, with any encroachments only after express approval from residents; support for Metchosin residents voting separately on any referendum rather than as part of a Colwood-Langford complex.

He wants no sewage outfalls into Juan de Fuca Strait and wants a hospital located in the western community, the sooner the better.



PERKINS

LANGFORD
(one seat)

ED LUBICK, 33, of 500 Westwind Drive, a developer, president of Southwind Developments Ltd., married, two children.

"We only have one specific person elected for Langford by Langford residents," says Lubick. "He must be prepared to intercede on Langford's behalf regardless of any opposition from other government agencies as the interests of Langford residents come first."

Lubick sys he doesn't think Langford has had this kind of representation on the regional board and it's time it did.

He is concerned with the lack of a hospital in the area and says he will oppose the proposed building of one in Saanich "if it means denying one in our immediate area."

"Westbrooke Park was donated in May 1973 and unfortunately it looks like the city dump. I feel the regional board should have cleaned it up and put it into use for all the residents of Langford to enjoy."

He says there is a need for for cross-walks and traffic lights, particularly at Goldstream and Millstream.

The region is spending $480,000 on planning and Langford's share is $36,000.

"We are wondering where these funds were applied."

ERIC PALLISTER, 53, 2269 Millstream Rd., park supervisor, married, six children.

Pallister, seven years on the regional board, is the incumbent, and he says he is asking for support again "so that our district can prosper with a sane development program."

Following are the items he sees needing attention:

Completion over the next few months of a community plan, "with several public meetings so that we have maximum citizen input."

A new zoning bylaw which will reflect the aspirations of the community plan.

Continued pressure for improvements to the drainage problems which have plagued Langford in recent years.

Pallister wants a treatment plant for any sewer system installed for proposed provincial housing program and he favors continued development of Juan de Fuca Park on a gradual basis.

When the region gains the necessary jurisdiction, he wants to see it develop play parks on land already acquired and move into an urban parks program "so that we can acquire some key properties that will complement the community plan."

He will continue to push for an acute care hospital in a location which would best serve the western community.

PETER ROBBINS, 35, of Durrance Road, a teacher, married, three children.

A member of the Highland Community Association, Robbins says that concentration of power, at every level of government, is an increasing threat to freedom of choice of both individuals and local associations.

When such power begins to work independent of the public and their chosen means of

GARDNER

GIBSON

MALCOLM

Four candidates are competing for the office of mayor in Sidney, left vacant by Stan Dear who is not running after having held the office for the past six years.

In the race are aldermen Wilkie Gardner, Hugh Hollingworth and Peter Malcolm and retired businessman Wilf Gibson.

The four have been invited by the Times to present their platforms.

WILKIE GARDNER

Gardner, who has served on Sidney council for the past ten years, says he stands on his record of always considering the interests of the local taxpayers.

"I promise to willingly co-operate with Central and North Saanich municipalties to solve our common water and recreation problems," Gardner said.

He said now is the time for stabilization.

"My continuing desire for Sidney is to remain integrated in the small town living which I personally have found to be the most gratifying," he added.

HUGH HOLLINGWORTH

Hollingworth says he is seeking the office of mayor on the merits on what he has done during the four years as alderman, what he is doing now and what he intends to do.

On his past record he said he helped instigate the construction of the Senior Citizen Activity Centre, the Sewer Treatment Plant and as parks chairman worked extensively to create the town plan regarding future development. During the CUPE strike he worked about 450 hours as garbage man, treatment plant operator and other duties at no cost to the taxpayer.

At present he is regional board director and in this capacity he said he has endeavored to keep municipal costs down.

"I fought the municipal hall extension at a cost of $120,000 when only $60,000 was budgeted for," Hollingworth said.

"If elected mayor I will continue to demand that the Capital Regional District supply domestic water to the entire peninsula to enable Sidney to attract industrial and commerical development and residential housing so as to create a greater tax base and keep your taxes to a minimum."

Hollingworth said he will also support the marina proposal for three reasons:

—When complete with new customs facilties, it will attract new tourism to the Sidney area;

—This will provide employment benefit local business and broaden the tax base;

—It will improve the site of the foot of Beacon Avenue.

PETER MALCOLM

"Water and recreation facilities are not the issues in this municipal election," Malcolm said, "but rather, the issues are who can best facilitate the implementation of these services and who is the most able to influence the impact of taxation that these projects will create."

On water, Malcolm said he will work on the only long-term solution — that of gaining access to Sooke Lake water.

"This can only be done through co-operation and negotiation with Victoria Water District, something we have not yet done."

Malcolm said he is in favor of the original complete recreation complex proposed by the Tri-municipal Recreation Committee, but because North and Central Saanich have decided to cut costs one half he feels "half a loaf is better than none."

Malcolm also wants to broaden the tax base to ease the pressure on present taxpayers.

WILF GIBSON

Gibson, whose family has lived in the Sidney area since 1887, feels that Sidney is at the crossroads of development and as a retired businessman, he can devote all his energies to the task.

"Long-range planning must be undertaken if the quality of life now enjoyed by our citizens is to be protected and enhanced," Gibson said, "and this planning should proceed with members of the community having the opportunity to contribute."

Gibson said the Sidney Water Board should continue as a separate entity but communications between the board and the council should be improved by having a member of the council sit in on all board meetings.

He said he is prepared to back the recreation complex in its present reduced form.

"It includes an ice rink and swimming pool which are the only essential facilities necessary for the development of our community youth programs," Gibson said.

He also said he believes in tight budgetary controls and if elected he will be prepared to see that it is carried out.

"My experience in business and in community service has prepared me to give leadership to the management of town affairs.

"By giving freely of my time with no conflicting business interests, I feel Sidney affairs would get the attention demanded of a community with a million-dollar budget and I would be in a position to protect the interests of its citizens, so many of whom are on fixed incomes."

Don't Expect Improvement In Mining Stocks—Investor

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

Investors should not gamble that Vancouver penny mining stocks will take off as a result of the Dec. 11 provincial election, warns James Bassett, Vancouver Island director of the Investment Dealers Association.

"The B.C. mining industry is in very bad shape and it would be unrealistic to expect any dramatic improvement as a result of political factors."

The market will improve as economic conditions change and taxation regulations are altered—and these things will take time.

"There may be a certain euphoria as a result of a change of government in December but any surge would be based upon hope rather than fact."

Investors should not be surprised if the market did not react at all, regardless of which party wins.

He said the factors to consider include the following:

—World market conditions continue to be weak. There are some signs of recovery but this could involve many months. This recovery is at least as important as the political factors.

—The speculative market in Vancouver has been all but extinguished as a result of provincial government policies. This depressed condition probably will continue for many more months regardless of political considerations.

—Companies that have pulled out of B.C. will not rush back in just because of a change in government or a major change in policy. Once a company has been disillusioned about an area, it is slow to return.

—During the recession, the outlook is poor for most kinds of speculative stocks. Investment houses are recommending purchases of high grade, high quality stocks, especially those with significant dividend levels.

Bassett said his estimate of market reaction is based upon known facts at this time. Major announcements by parties contesting the election could change the investment outlook.

But, regardless of government policies, economic conditions are equally as important and there are no signs that would encourage speculative mining investment this fall.

While the Vancouver market itself is weak, it is far from dormant, he said.

Some companies operating outside B.C. are creating interest on the Vancouver board. These stocks will remain largely unaffected by B.C. political considerations.

Those companies operating inside B.C. will have to await enactment of new mining legislation as well as improved economic conditions before their outlook improves.

"Conditions are constantly changing but from here it looks like the provincial election will have little immediate impact on the Vancouver market."

'Racism' Resolution Hit

Times News Services

WASHINGTON—The U.S. Senate, reacting quickly to the United Nations resolution labelling Zionism a form of racism, will reassess "the United States' further participation" in the world assembly.

Both houses of Congress, joining in a storm of U.S. protest Tuesday, passed resolutions condemning the UN General Assembly action.

The House of Representatives, however, deleted the call for reassessment of U.S. participation.

President Ford also reacted strongly against the UN vote when he met nine visiting members of the Israeli parliament in Washington.

He called the Zionism resolution a "wholly unjustified action."

Later, speaking in Charlestown, W.Va., Ford said his administration will be "completely firm in our position" of opposing the resolution, though he did not spell out what reaction he will take.

Following Tuesday's congressional actions, state department officials conceded that they had participated with House and Senate leaders in drafting the language of the resolutions.

The administration's reasoning, these officials said, was based on the idea that an official expression of U.S. dissatisfaction with the UN was justified.

The officials added though that they did not want this gesture to go beyond the limits outlined later by Ford.

To this end, they said, the state department took the position that it would support a resolution calling for hearings on U.S. participation rather than one decreeing a suspension of membership or funds.

In the debates before the congressional votes, House and Senate members were unanimous in denouncing the UN action and, in some cases, calling for economic retaliation or cuts in foreign aid to those countries that voted for the UN resolution.

Religious organizations, including the World Council of Churches, also condemned the assembly's note.

The World Council, which represents the world's major Protestant and Orthodox denominations, voiced "unequivocal opposition" to the resolution and appealed for reconsideration.

The Vatican did not immediately comment on the vote.

About 100,000 demonstrators in Nek York City's garment centre blocked all traffic from 37th Street to Times Square along Seventh Avenue in protest of the vote.

Sen. Jacob Javits told the rally the resolution was "obscene" and represented anti-Semitism, "the oldest and most virulent form of racism known to human history."

POST TALKS CONTINUE

WASHINGTON (WP) — Negotiators for The Washington Post and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers held a full day of contract talks Tuesday and scheduled another meeting for Wednesday morning.

The electricians are the only other craft union at The Post to enter negotiations with the newspaper since federal mediators initiated intensive efforts to find a settlement between The Post and striking pressmen last month.

Pentagon Workers Laud Schlesinger Farewell

WASHINGTON (WP) — James Schlesinger, in his farewell address as U.S. secretary of defence, said detente should be pursued "vigorously" but "without illusion."

"Detente rests upon an underlying equilibrium of force, the maintenance of a military balance," he told a crowd of military officers and civilians that gathered around the plaza outside the Pentagon's river entrance to say goodbye.

Schlesinger, fired by President Ford on Nov. 2, said nothing about the circumstances of his departure or of his differences with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger on detente and strategic arms policy.

Instead, he was philosophical throughout his speech — returning to many of the themes that marked his 28 months of running the Pentagon.

"A national mood of skepticism has gone too far," Schlesinger said. "While a judicious skepticism indeed is always necessary, a mood of undiluted skepticism forces concentration on the inconsequential and ignores the permanent and valuable."

The U.S. military "served as a pillar of stability" during the nation's "political and constitutional difficulties of recent years" he added.

Pentagon employees applauded Schlesinger as he arrived and commented favorably about his speech afterward as they streamed back to work.

"He really laid it on," said one in commenting on Schlesinger's plea for a strong military.

"Those SOB politicians," complained one navy officer

"Those SOB politicians," complained one navy officer in referring to the secretary's sudden dismissal.

A bipartisan group of 108 House members, in a letter dated Nov. 6, wrote Schle-House members, in a letter dated Nov. 6, wrote Schlesinger that "we fully recognize the right to any president to choose the members of his cabinet, but that recognition in no way detracts from our belief that you should have continued in your present post."

. . . THEY DON'T KNOW ANY BETTER . . .

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — A University of Michigan researcher today said Americans seem relatively satisfied with their lives, particularly those who don't know any better.

Angus Campbell of the Institute for Social Research released results of a 1971 survey at a meeting of National Science writers. The study indicated even the poor and uneducated tend to ignore other life styles and accept their living conditions.

Campbell disputed recent studies by Midwest Research Institute rating the life quality in cities and states by "objective data" such as wealth, politics, environment and crime rates.

New Trial Asked Against Kasser

NEWARK, New Jersey — (CFP) — The United States government has moved in federal court here to overturn the dismissal of fraud charges against Dr. Alexander Kasser and other key figures in the Churchill Forest Industries scandal.

Appearing in federal district court here, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission asked Judge Lawrence Whipple to reverse his decision of last March 13 that he did not have jurisdiction in the case.

In his March decision, Judge Whipple stated that "it was not the intention of the U.S. Congress to include essentially foreign transactions . . . within the gambit of federal anti-fraud legislation."

The fraud charges, brought by the SEC, allege that Dr. Kasser and eight co-defendants engaged in a scheme to fraudently obtain $46 million from the Manitoba Development Corporation — an agency of the Manitoba government — to build a pulp mill at The Pas, Manitoba.

Whipple said he will rule on the SEC request at a later date.

William Sullivan, a SEC lawyer, told the court the original dismissal should be reversed because key transactions in the case took place in the United States.

He also stated that two recent decisions in other U.S. courts, one involving the now-defunct IOS mutual fund empire, had set precedents for U.S. jurisdiction in the CFI case.

NEW YORK CRISIS IN PEOPLE TERMS

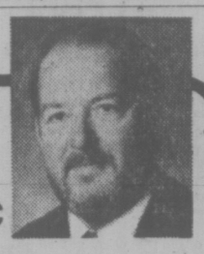
NEW YORK (WP) — The human factors of New York City's fiscal crisis came into clearer focus Tuesday than it ever has before as Mayor Abraham Beame detailed more than $200 million in forced spending cuts.

In his first agency-by-agency breakdown of budget slashes necessitated by the city's debt crisis, Beame said that a minimum of 28 day-care centres will be shut down outright, along with several senior citizen centres and an unspecified number of other social service programs.

Nearly 1,100 uniformed policemen will be laid off, decreasing street patrols by an estimated 3.5 per cent. Detective forces will be reduced by 4 per cent and response to traffic accidents will be curtailed by 4 per cent, the mayor said.

Nearly $40 million was cut from the school system's budget, which will force severe reductions in secondary education programs for nursing, dental and medical care.

Please think about CITY TRAFFIC



Let's face it, traffic congestion is a major problem that must be solved. A realistic review of our street and transportation systems is needed so that effective plans can be formed for future traffic flow. More effort must be made to co-ordinate planning activities so that disruption of our streets is minimized. Think about a man who is concerned about traffic. Please think about Bob Wright.

TORONTO (CP) — Mariam Peters, 16, stabbed in a subway station Friday night while on her way to visit her grandmother, died Tuesday night in hospital.

Miss Peters underwent 10 hours of surgery Saturday and did not regain consciousness after the attack.

Kremlin, Amin Break Over Angola Issue

Times News Services

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union has suspended relations with Uganda, once its closest ally in East Africa, and accused President Idi Amin's government of unfriendly actions and insults.

Amin, in a statement broadcast by the official Uganda radio, said trouble between the two countries might be blamed on an "overdose of vodka" taken by the Soviet ambassador to Uganda and said Moscow should send a competent replacement.

The suspension of relations Tuesday meant a setback to Soviet influence in black Africa and a blow to Uganda's shaky economy, Western diplomats in neighboring Kenya said.

Observers said the economy, drained by heavy defence spending and expulsion of foreign technicians since 1972, would be hit by a cut-off in Soviet development aid, including a large farm mechanization training centre and a cotton spinning mill not yet in production.

Moscow's announcement of its interuption of relations came only hours before the deadline set by Amin to break relations on his own unless the Kremlin sent a top-level envoy to appease him.

Amin had accused the Soviet Union of trying to pressure him into supporting the Moscow-backed liberation movement in Angola, the MPLA.

Late Monday, he demanded that Moscow recall its ambassador, Andrei Zakharov, whom the government, controlled Ugandan radio called a criminal.

As president of the Organization of African States, Amin has been trying to arrange a ceasefire in Agnola between the Popular Movement and rival factions from the National Front for the Liberation of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

The Soviet statement Tuesday made no mention of Amin's ultimatum.

In a separate statement, the Kremlin defended its assistance to the Popular Movement as helping the Marxist groups counter "imperialist aggression" in the newly independent state.

At the moment the Soviet Union has more than 500 persons in Uganda working as military and economic advisers, plus a number of doctors.

NO REAL SQUEAL!

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An official of the amalgamated meat cutters union proposed a way to lower the price of pork — provide more sex for pigs.

Patrick Gorman, secretary-treasurer of the union, put forth the ideal of harem-style sex for pigs in an editorial published in the union's monthly magazine, Butcher Workmen. The article was entitled "Pigs Love Sex."

"Nobody is eating high on the hog today," Gorman wrote. He said the current price of $2.50 a pound or more for pork gives consumers the "right to squeal."

"The phoney reason for this unbelievable price is that there is a shortage of hogs," he said. "This ought to bring a belly laugh for all. As all know, pigs love sex even more than other animals and in numbers have the largest litters of all.

"The female pig knows nothing whatever about the pill either and, frankly speaking, knows nothing about abortion."

Thus, Gorman said, the shortage of pork is not the fault of the pigs. He blamed it instead on swine raisers who are creating a shortage to keep their prices up.

"While harems may be completely out of style for the past several centuries, perhaps a little encouragement for this system in the sex life of swine would bring the price of pork down. My, how the population would grow!"

IRA Men Go Into Hiding

BELFAST (UPI) — A bloody fued between two rival Irish Republican Army factions today forced politicians supporting the warring groups to go into hiding.

Four persons were shot to death Tuesday in the worst day of fighting since the IRA feud erupted three weeks ago. A 16-year-old boy was wounded.

The slayings, part of a power struggle between the Provisional and Official wings of the IRA, raised the death toll to 1,358 in more than five years of religious warfare in Northern Ireland.

The two IRA factions split in 1970 because the Provisionals opposed a political settlement with Britain.

The Republican Club — the political voice of the Official IRA — advised members to stay away from their homes until the present wave of violence ends.

Sinn Fein, the political wing of the Provisional IRA, also told members to seek "safe houses."

CAMPAIGNER ROBBED

WHITE ROCK (CP) — Don Bates, Delta provincial Liberal candiate, spoke for law and order Monday after a bandit knocked over his campaign headquarters for $200 Sunday.

The robber, armed with a revolver, entered Bates headquarters at noon Sunday and pointed a pistol at committee worker Don Erb, 22, police said.

He made Erb empty his wallet, then fled out the back door. Police made no arrests.

Bates said it wasn't a publicity stunt.

"I'd do almost anything to get elected," he said. "But I wouldn't stoop to that."

Bates said Erb had been registering provincial voters and that the robber waited until he was alone in the office.

MB to Close Paper Machine

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. has set Feb. 6 as the retirement date for its number 3 newsprint machine at Powell River, Bruce Howe, group vice-president of pulp and paper, announced Tuesday.

Howe said 71 labor relief employees will be laid off, subject to recall when work is available. He said that the number 4 machine at Powell River would be shut down in mid-June.

Closing down of both machines was first announced last February, but no dates were given.

Howe said increasing production costs and general market conditions made it uneconomic to delay the retirement of the machine, which makes 105 tons of newsprint a day, beyond February

After the shutdown of number 4 mill, MacMillan Bloedel will have six paper machines at Powell River, and Howe said it would still be one of the largest newsprint producing centres in the world.

"There will be no curtailment of newsprint to Powell River customers as a result of the retirement of the machines," he said.

Tory Raps Bilingualism

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tom Cossitt (PC — Leeds) said Monday that the federal government should cut immediately its bilingual program both to reduce government expenditures and "as a means of restoring sanity to a program gone mad."

Cossit made the remarks during a radio open-line program, and in a news release.

"Disastrous methods of implementing bilingualism are splitting the unity of the nation, dstroying or prejudicing the careers of hundreds of English-speaking civil servants, and setting up illegal French-language ghettos within the government service that are an insult to French-speaking Canadians," he said.

Cossit said government statements that the cost of bilingualism is several hundred million a year "are false ... a true figure would be close to a billion dollars."

Barrett Challenges Bennett

PORT COQUITLAM (CP) — Premier Dave Barrett Monday night challenged Social Credit Leader Bill Bennett to state his partys 'policy on the government acquisitions of the last three years.

Barrett told 280 people at his nominating convention he wants to know Social Credit policy concerning the Princess Marguerite, and other NDP economic ventures.

"The people of this province have the right to know where they (Social Credit) stand on these issues," Barrett told the convention. "I dare him to say he would get rid of them (the acquisitions)."

After spending Tuesday in Victoria where he laid a wreath at the cenotaph there, Barrett was to campaign today in Kamloops and Clinton.

He moves on to Ashcroft and Merritt on Thursday, before going to Saskatoon Friday to address the annual convention of the Saskatchewan New Democratic Party.

Meanwhile, Conservative Leader ScoKtt Wallace said convention of the Saskatchewan New Democratic Party.

Meanwhile, Conservative Leader Scott Wallace said Monday his party could hold a balance of power after the Dec. 11 provincial general election.

Dr. Wallace said in an interview in Prince George that his advisers tell him that the Conservatives can win some seats. The party had only one seat when the 55-seat legislature was dissolved.

Land Woes Blamed On Forest Reserves

VANCOUVER (CP — A University of British Columbia forester says that improvident inclusion of large areas of non-forest land within provincial forest reserves is wrong.

Jack Walters, Forester in charge of the UBC research forest, makes the statement in a brief to be submitted to the Pearse Royal commission on Forest Resources. The commission resumes its session today.

The brief says that the province is land poor because so much territory has been locked up inside holdings reserved for forestry.

The brief cites the 49 million acres of non-forest land contained within public sustained yield units which total 133 million acres.

Tree farm licences embrace 22 million acres of land and 12 million acres, or 55 per cent, is classified as non-forest.

Thus, we find in these two tenures, 61 million acres of non-forest land; in addition, there are 46 million acres of poor forest land of marginal or sub-marginal commercial worth, being low in productivity, expensive to exploit or ecologically delicate", the brief says.

"Yielding little or no revenue, these vast areas are set aside for a purpose they cannot fulfill. Such improvidence dilutes the funds available for forest management, creates an illusion of infinite resource and perpetuates conflicts over land use."

The brief says that tenures granted forest companies should be limited to land that is economicaly and ecologically suited to wood production.

Land Use Regional Issue

expressing their wishes, then the public must reassert itself.

"Last year, largely because of pressure from local action groups, notably the Highland Community Association, the Capital region board of directors was compelled to publicly air a regional planning decision which was, in the event, seen to make less than complete environmental, economic and engineering sense," he says.

He believes it is vitally important that the decision-making processes of regional government be kept open and responsive to public scrutiny and participation.

Local interest groups of all kinds are the best way for different communities in the region to maintain their own initiative, he says.

And for the regional board, "time spent early on listening and talking to local associations is time well spent. In the long run, it is better spent, more productive, than the time of professional advisors without benefit of local experience."

COLWOOD — ONE SEAT

HOWARD DRUMMOND, 58, of 2875 Hagel Rd., retired federal civil servant, married, four children.

Drummond's community service includes serving as an alternate regional director, as a trustee in the Sooke school district, as president of the Metchosin Farmers' Institute and director and manager of the Luxton Fall Fair.

He says he is a firm believer any hospital being considered for the region must be located to the west of sites already proposed.

"The sewage disposal problem . . . like the hospitals has dragged on far too long. I am sure there are better, more efficient methods of disposal than dumping in the straits.

Future development for Colwood and the whole western sector requires the most detailed plan, says Drummond.

Residents must let their director and the professional planners know what they want or a plan will emerge without consideration of local needs and wishes.

"If elected I would like to be able to report to some organization within the Colwood area where I could pass on what is happening and in turn report back to the board your wishes.

JACK HANNAM, 51, of 3424 Metchosin Rd., a teacher, married, three children.

He believes there should be strict adherence to the regional plan in the community's efforts to maintain balance between residential and commercial development. Modifications should only be allowed by input from an informed electorate.

The possibility of decreasing lots sizes and size of houses in certain areas should be investigated in an effort to lower costs of starter homes for younger families. Tots' play areas should be included in each development to enhance the quality of community life, he says.

Because there is much rocky and sub-marginal land, a study of spot sewage and disperal systems should be undertaken with an eye to development of an eventual overall trunk system.

Hannam says a hospital is needed in the View Royal area to service the western and south-western section, with an eye on the potential development at Sooke.

The possibility of a commuter rail or bus service between Langford and Victoria should be explored, including the feasibility of joining a portion of the now-defunct CN system to the E and N Railway.

BRIDLE BITS
with phil merrick

Fox-hunting came to the Saanich Peninsula on the weekend even though wild foxes have long since ceased to inhabit the area.

But the hounds did run and "give tongue" — fox-hunting talk for the noise the pack creates following the scent.

Cause of the hounds' exuberance on Saturday was the "drag." An hour or so before the hunt a mounted rider rode across the countryside dragging an appetizing bag along the ground. It left a scent which the hounds followed knowing that they would be rewarded with a feast when they found the scents origin.

This moment is known as the "kill." And this time the hounds found about 10 pounds of raw beef. Between the nine couples, (Foxhounds are always counted in twos) there was not too much to go around and a few disagreements over the larger pieces erupted. Smaller pieces disappeared in one gulp.

After the hounds were checked for injuries in the 20-mile run, they were loaded into their own private van for the trip home to the Fraser Valley Hunt Club.

It seems the object of fox-hunting is to allow mounted followers a chance to gallop cross-country, jumping fences ,hedges and ditches.

But foxes are cunning and use many tricks to get the hounds off the trail. When this happens, the huntsman calls a "check" to give horses, riders and hounds a breather. Suddenly a hound speaks up to let all know he has "found the line" and off they go again.

To simulate these checks the "drag" is lifted off the ground and carried for a distance before being laid down to spread the scent again. A pause of a few minutes every two or three miles allows the stragglers to catch up, and gives everyone a rest.

The hunt covered the area north of Telegraph Bay Road and the Island View Beach. Coming over an old snake-fence bordering farm land the hounds found good scent and were in full cry heading south.

The organizers of the ... had utilized the logs lying around to construct a line of jumps along the shore well above high water mark. A few people were fortunate enough to watch the hounds and almost 50 riders come over the fence, turn down the beach taking jump after jump at full gallop.

The hunt organizers didn't publicize the event because ... feared traffic jams on the narrow roads. This was unfortunate because many Victorians would have enjoyed seeing the pink-coated hunters and hearing the pack in full pursuit.

Amsterdam Now 'Syringe of Europe'

BRUSSELS (WP) — Chinese-dominated drug traffic through Brussels and Amsterdam has replaced "the French connection" as the route for Europe's illicit narcotics supply.

Police here and in neighboring countries have noticeably intensified their efforts in the past few weeks to try to break this recently established worldwide network.

A stiffening of penalties here for trafficking followed by a series of raids and major drug seizures in three neighboring countries has been orchestrated by authorities who hope to halt the tide of narcotics which has turned Belgium into a main drug thoroughfare and nearby Amsterdam into the "syringe of Europe."

The aim, according to officials here, is to cut the links between heroin sources in the "golden triangle" of Southeast Asia and hashish from Pakistan and the European distribution centre in Holland. This Chinese-dominated system has in recent years replaced the traditional "French connection," which smuggled Turkish narcotics through the port of Marseilles.

Authorities have known for at least a year that Amsterdam, with its large Oriental community and tolerated opium dens, had replaced Marseilles. This happened when the Marseilles operation was largely destroyed and Turkish opium poppy growth was interrupted and then controlled.

An underworld power struggle for control of the new narcotics supply route's reached a peak early this year when three Oriental figures related to vice in Amsterdam were murdered.

Since then Belgium, with its relatively open frontiers and soft drug penalties, has become a major transit point on the way to Amsterdam. The main method of infiltration became the weekly flight from Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, to Brussels which regularly disgorged several drug couriers laden with high-grade heroin hidden in everything from lemons to candles.

Although police here repeatedly intercepted these smugglers, and others who came in waves by land and sea routes, they felt handicapped by Belgium's drug laws, which frequently freed the offenders after eight months in jail to return to a bonus that made imprisonment bearable.

Even while these penalties were still relatively soft, Belgian police and customs guards in the first nine months of the year at the Brussels airport and Antwerp harbor seized some 4,000 pounds of marijuana, eight pounds of hashish, three pounds of opium, 125 pounds of heroin and thousands of doses of morphine, LSD and amphetamines.

But new legislation, which elevates penalties to from five to 20 years in prison, have given a new impetus to the authorities here. "Belgium is putting out the message that it won't tolerate this any more," one official observed. "It's been a long time coming but it means business."

A narcotics agent said "the organization has been hurt by the recent crackdown" which saw several sseizures in Belgium, Holland and France, including a 50-pound find in Amsterdam which was the biggest ever in that city.

MALARIA CRISIS IN INDIA

NEW DELHI (AP) — Private health authorities here claim that malaria has become epidemic again in India and the government's response has been dangerously inadequate.

These authorities also charged that the government is trying to suppress the full dimensions of what they describe as a malaria crisis.

But Dr. S. Pattanayak, director of India's malaria program, disputes the charges. He said in an interview that at least three million cases will be reported this year from India's population of 580 million—an increase of 25 per cent. But he maintained that "this is not yet epidemic proportions and the situation is not out of control."

Dr. Pattanayak also said that the malaria death rate this year is on a par with the death rate over the last 10 years.

Private doctors challenge his figures, however, saying that many poor people die of malaria with their illnesses never detected and the cause of death never examined.

"The government does not want to admit the malaria program has failed and private doctors won't speak out for fear of reprisals under the national emergency," said one leading physician who asked not to be named.

"But the fact is that a very serious epidemic is under way here and the government's response has been total apathy. If they were really interested in dealing with the problem they would advertise the need for prevention. But there is nothing. If this goes on many, many people are going to die."

These doctors claim that government statistics of three million cases expected this year do not give a full view of the number of people afflicted because they represent only those cases reported to hospitals and not those cases seen by doctors or those that go untreated.

Furthermore, they say, coverage of the malaria problem in the censored Indian press has not been extensive enough to alert the public to the potential dangers and what preventive measures might be taken.

Dr. Pattanayak denied that the government was trying to suppress the scope of the malaria outbreak. But he acknowledged that due to economic constraints he hasn't the resources for use of preventive drugs or for an effective short-range counterattack on the mosquito-transmitted disease which causes high fever, dehydration, anemia and sometimes death.

"I need 450 million rupees (about $50 million) to handle malaria now but I have only half that," the doctor said. "We are seeking emergency money but at this stage malaria eradication is not possible, though control remains a priority."

This season's heavy monsoon flooding has depleted most of the national funds reserved for such emergencies, he said, otherwise they would have been forthcoming from the national budget.

He said a special committee, working with doctors from the World Health Organization, has just mapped out a new strategy and that if the emergency money comes through the situation will improve.

Pulp-mill smoke hanging over city can be seen well before Coho docks

So Like Canada . . . But a Real Feeling Of Setting Down in Foreign Country

(Second of three)

PORT ANGELES — Strange how places like people can be alike and yet so different.

Take this little place.

You slop across the Juan de Fuca Strait (a pleasant hour and-a-half trip from Victoria in the MV. Coho if the sea is kind and doesn't toss you about too much) and you find a city quite like cities in Canada and yet so American in many ways.

Just as in B.C., the forest is everywhere. It's on the slopes of the nearby Olympic Mountains. It's in the logs piled high on the shore or floating in the water. And it's in the very air you breathe, A cloud of smoke from a nearby pulp mill hangs low over the city. The smell of cedar never leaves. And a sign reminds you: you're in "Port Angeles, where the timber is wealth."

The day after I crossed the Strait, there was no wind and it was a delicious 65 degrees Fahrenheit. And, as I got warmer by walking round, it was as though I were spending the day in a cedar-lined sauna bath. But on the second day, it clouded over, rained a little and a cruel wind whipped the sea into a fury and sent the temperature tumbling to a more-like-Vancouver-Island 47.

Everywhere there are reminders of the nearness and closeness of Canada.

From tiny Hynes Park, which overlooks the harbor and the Strait, you gaze past Ediz Hook with its long roadway and clutter of U.S. Coast Guard buildings to a blur on the horizon. You know that's home and that you're really not very far away.

Just in front of you there's a mini-Peace Arch put there by the Lions Clubs of British Columbia, Washington and Northern Idaho and bearing the inscription: "In friendship we serve."

Nearby there's a sign that says: "Across the Strait of Juan de Fuca 18 miles is Victoria. On clear days one can see the buildings of the city."

And at night the lights of the city wink at you kind of symbolically.

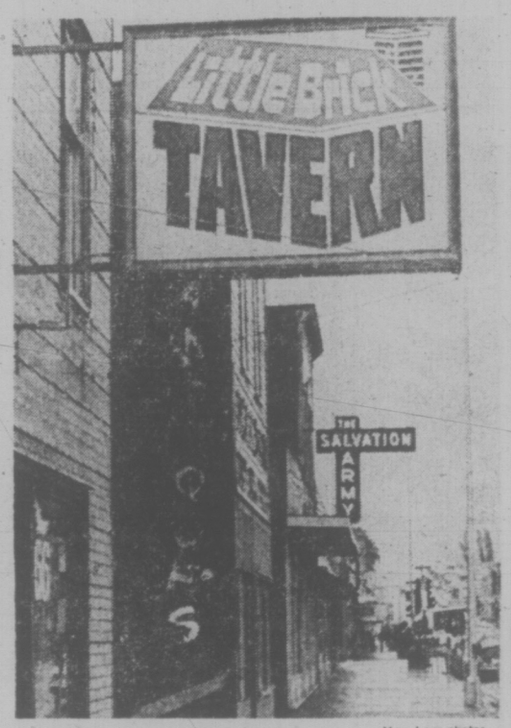
Quite a number of people living here, or so I was told, were born in Canada. Many came here because they're married to Americans. Both of the firms involved in the two biggest industries here — pulp (Rayonier) and paper (Crown Zellerbach) — have mills in Canada. So there's a familiar feeling.

And yet there's a feeling of difference, too. That feeling you get somehow of being in a foreign country.

Though the population is only a modest 16,350 and the traffic is not heavy, the two main streets are one-way. First Street runs one-way to the east, and Front Street runs one-way to the west. At each end and in between there are numerous joining streets, but most of the traffic seems to travel up First Street and then back down Front Street. And after some time you emerge a little giddy, as if getting off a carousel.

But the cars don't speed. Or at least I haven't seen them speeding. In fact, I was quite surprised to find that everyone seems to keep within the posted 25 mph limit. And they actually stop in plenty of time when they see an orange traffic light. And that's un-Canadian to start with.

Then there are all those taverns. You see Babe's Tavern almost as soon as you get off the ferry and in the space of one block on Front Street there are the Thunderbird Tavern, Chinook Tavern, M and C Tavern and Harbor Tavern. Up on First Street, there are the Port Angeles Pub and the Little Brick Tavern, curiously standing almost next door to the Salvation Army.



—Max Low photos

Port Angeles—A pub and salvation

And there are the people themselves who, although living so close to Canada, are very American. The dress, especially of the women, is even more casual than north of the border and to a visitor there's the greeting of "Howdy" and with it a much slower, unhurried way of speaking.

Many people here visit Canada quite regularly and to them Victoria is somewhere different, a bit of an oddity, a "fun" place.

One man told me he and his wife go to Victoria "eight or 10 times a year" and like to shop there, particularly for gifts, because of the vast range of imported goods.

"We have found the business people we deal with in Victoria unusually friendly," he said. "And we look forward to seeing them each visit."

The couple said, too, they often try to take in a play at the McPherson or see the museum, which they think is "great."

And a waitress in a coffee bar said she goes over to Victoria about once a year.

"Not for anything special," she explained with a smile, "just for the change — to goof off a bit."

City manager Ken Whorton, who came to Washington three years ago from California, has been to Victoria twice in the last year and "thoroughly enjoyed it there."

"We have a very strong relaitonship in the point of view of being gateway cities in both cases," Whorton said in an interview. "We have an exceptionally high tourist trade through here in the summer and most people coming back from Victoria say the Canadians treated them very well."

The city manager said both cities tend to have a feeling of isolation and this formed a common bond.

"You're on an island and we're isolated, too," he said "Don't get me wrong, though. I think most people enjoy this feeling of isolation.

"Frankly though, I find Victoria much more enjoyable after the tourist season," confessed Whorton. "Then, when the Canadian people have more time, they enjoy talking to you and discussing things.

"We think a lot of Victoria and we enjoy the cosmopolitan atmosphere you people are able to create over there.

"You know," he adds with a big grin, "it's funny but when people here have relatives visiting from other parts of the States, they tell them 'you mustn't go home before you visit Victoria.' "

Gov't Steps Into Fight To Save Home

A temporary restraint order under the Archeological and Historic Sites Protection Act has been issued by Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall for the dwelling at 821 Burdett.

The move follows an earlier stop work order by the city engineer to halt demolition at the last remaining downtown example of a Samuel Maclure-designed home.

Almost in perfect state of preservation outwardly, the building is owned by Park Pacific Apartments Ltd. and is to be wrecked to make way for future development.

Some demolition work had started while five tenants still occupied the six-suite building, and to protect these people the engineer stopped work.

Past president Terry Rekston, of the Hallmark Society, said the provincial secretary's order will permit the measuring, recording and photographing of the home with a view to assessing its value as a potential historic site.

Earlier, Park Pacific president Robert McAdams said his firm was in no rush to tear down the building and he would be prepared to cooperate with the Hallmark Society or others interested in finding a way to save the structure.

The demolition, which one tenant called harassment, proceeded despite McAdams' statement.

BOARD LOOKING AT SUSPENSION

The Capital Regional Board reviewed behind closed doors today the case of one of its health inspectors, suspended earlier for allegedly offering gratuitous election advice.

Robert Bradbury, 26, a health inspector in Saanich, was suspended from his $1,200-a-month job by board chairman Jim Campbell.

Campbell declined to comment on the case before he reported to the board. But other sources indicated there was a complaint Bradley had told a caller complaining about a blocked sewer line that one solution would be to vote in a certain way in Saturday's Saanich council election.

100 Protest Marina Plan At Sidney

More than 100 residents jammed Sidney council chamber Monday, many of them to protest rezoning of 9.6 acres of waterlot for a private marina.

Public hearing on the proposal was moved into the town firehall in view of the turnout which attracted professional briefs from the Yacht Clubs Association of B.C., the federal department of environment, a biologist, the developer and consultant engineer Ker Priestman and Associates.

Council tabled the matter for further discussion after points were raised that had not been previously entered, but Ald. Peter Malcolm said council generally is favorable to the concept.

Malcolm said aldermen do not like the idea of rezoning such a choice piece of waterfront land that would automatically raise its market value without any development work being done. Also, he said, there is no guarantee of federal government participation in a breakwater that would be necessary to make the marina a year-round facility.

Meanwhile, John Salvador, one of a group of concerned upland property owners, said a petition against the marina will be delivered to council. He said it contains names of about 25 businesses and 150 residents from various parts of Sidney.

"They are not opposed to waterfront development, but they state that in the interests of the community this land should remain in control of the Crown."

Salvador said the proposal by Island View Marina Development company is basically the same as presented two years ago, at which time council rejected it.

The petition argues that if federal aid is given to a private undertaking there would be little hope of obtaining such help to provide "a total marine development" offering shelter to the entire harbor and not just to one marina.

Such a proposal is of long standing, the petitioners say, and would provide Sidney with "a fabulous public harbor with adjacent private marine, shopping and recreational facilities."

Petitioners also want to know what is contained in the developer's impact assessment before a decision is made by council.

Other points raised by the petition include parking facilities, small boat launching ramp, use of the public beach adjoining the site, space for visiting yachts, traffic congestion, water supply and a current ban on apartments and multiple dwellings.

Candidate Kennedy Returns

The 12th candidate for Greater Victoria school board, who has remained a mystery since nomination day, has finally surfaced.

Michael Joseph Patrick Kennedy said he was called out of town because of a death in the family and returned Sunday.

He plans to start door-knocking today to gather support.

Kennedy, 44, a janitor, moved Nov. 1 from the residence listed on his nomination papers to 120 Gorge Road.

He's running because he's "tired of seeing nothing done in the school district. There seems to be a stalemate — and there hasn't been any improvement in education."

Schools should go back to the basics of English, math and science and if children want to take a course in sociology it should be optional, says Kennedy, who has two children in school.

He also feels that speed limits in school zones should be more strictly enforced and drivers who break the limits should face stiff fines.

'GUARDIAN ANGEL' SAVED HIM

William Scott Phemister must have had "a guardian angel riding on his shoulder," Central Saanich police said today.

Phemister, 23, of Sidney, is in Resthaven Hospital recovering from a broken ankle and scrapes to his face and leg, the only injuries he received after being hurled more than 200 feet through the air after his camper van crashed into a highway divider at Pat Bay and Mount Newton Road at 5:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Police said the van was demolished and about $1,200 damage done to highways signs and poles.

Identity Problems for Candidate

Car dealer Edgar Rhomberg seems to have had difficulty choosing a party banner to match his political aspirations.

Rhomberg, 4513 Tanglewood, has announced he will seek the Liberal nomination in Saanich and The Islands, but the decision came after he gave the Conservatives a good look too.

A Tory spokesman said Rhomberg was trying to get the Tory nomination last week, "but because we've never heard very much of him and he was a stranger, we turned him down."

Barbara Butler sai dtoday executive members chuckled when they heard Rhomberg is now seeking the Liberal nomination.

Word came the day they received Rhomberg's application for Tory membership.

"I guess we'll place it in the stack of memoirs from this election," she said.

Asked about his party affiliations, Rhomberg confirmed he will seek the Liberal nomination at a meeting likely to be held next week.

Rhomberg said he has been a Liberal member since 1970.

"I feel it's a viable alternative to the far left and the far right," he said, adding he could be described as a "long-time" Grit.

Concerning the Tories, he said: "I didn't feel at home in that party.

"Everybody has to take a look at who is going to capture six or seven seats in the election," he said, explaining his party rationale.

ESCAPERS CAUGHT

Two youths who walked away from the minimum-security corrections centre at Jordan River early Sunday were recaptured by RCMP Tuesday afternoon in Duncan.

Melvin Jones, 18, and Harry Puglas, 17, were kept overnight in the Duncan police lockup and are expected to be transferred to Victoria today where they will appear in provincial court charged with escape and being unlawfully at large.

Sheila Thomas and her "money-makers"

The way Sheila Thomas sees it Olympic Coins are one of the best investments.

An information officer with the federal Olympic Coins program, she was in town this week trumpeting the program initiated last May to help pay for the Olympics, support Canadian Olympians, and educate the public about Canadian athletes.

She'll be back Dec. 4-9 to extend that message directly to the people of Greater Victoria when the program's travelling sport art show opens in the Mayfair Shopping Centre.

The show features the largest collection of sport art ever assembled in Canada.

When it ends next July 1 in Montreal it will have visited 31 Canadian and four U.S. cities, have travelled 15,712 miles, and been seen by more than 10 million people. The show is coming to only three B.C. centres — Victoria, Vancouver and Kelowna.

Most of the 130 exhibits are on loan from the National Sport and Recreation Centre in Ottawa and include paintings, photographs and sculptures of Canada's foremost athletes. Among them is the late Lester Patrick of Victoria, hockey's "Silver Fox."

But the real stars, in this show at least, are the coins — heralded "the most beautiful money, money can buy".

The Canadian Mint is making 28 coins in seven series in honor of the Olympics continuing a 2,000-year tradition of commemorative Olympic coinage. The first six series are completed and will be on display. The seventh will be available early next year. One and a quarter-million sets of the seven series are being produced.

Each series consists of four coins — two $10 and two $5 — and each depicts a different sports theme. The $5 coin costs $8, the $10 coin, $15.75. The coins are legal tender in Canada — at their face value.

More than 50 countries are participating in the sale of the coins, the first time Olympic coins have been sold worldwide. In one Latin American country a special act had to be passed to permit their sale.

So far $130 million worth of coins have been sold, realizing a $35 million profit which will help defray construction costs at the Montreal Olympic site. More than half the Canadian sales have come from the west.

In addition three per cent of the money gained from the sales — about one and a quarter-million dollars — has gone to Olympic associations in each participating country.

Olympic Coins hope to raise $100 million for the Games and Miss Thomas is confident that goal will be reached.

The reason is the coins can't help but appreciate in value.

From a practical standpoint they are sound investment, she says, for each coin contains 92.5 per cent pure British sterling silver.

And from a collector's standpoint they are a certain money-maker. She points out the 10-Deutschmark coin struck for the 1972 Munich Games originally sold for $3.50 and now sells for $14, while the 1,000-yen coin made for the 1964 Tokyo Games currently sells for $35, more than 10 times its original value.

No Doubt About It: Racing to Return

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

The Sandown race meeting was an outstanding success, even beyond the expectations of its operators, Capital City Turf Club, and it's now official that horse racing will be back again next fall.

President Ed Popham and vice-president George Harknett made that abundantly clear on Tuesday, the final day of the 16-day meeting that marked return of thoroughbred racing to Sandown Park after a four-year absence.

And the reasoning is simple enough. Despite some atrocious weather conditions, the meeting produced a record handle of $2,813,849, another single-day betting record of $301,183 on Tuesday and a daily average of $175,865.

To Popham and Harknett, this was exceptional as the club's break-even point was estimated at around a daily handle of $125,000.

Many improvements are planned for next year, mainly to the parking lot where a grid drainage system is to be implemented, and mutual facilities will also be improved.

The main parking area this fall proved to be a problem because of record rainfall. But still the people came. And on Tuesday there was another record for Sandown, the official attendance being 5,800 plus.

Obviously, there were more people there than that, and it is believed that the estimated over-all total was 7,000 and a record for a south Island sporting event.

Certainly it was crowded and the total attendance for the meeting was announced as 44,895, another record.

On the final day, Coulea Sage, a five-year-old brown gelding, owned by C. B. Scott, won the Vancouver Island championship over one mile and 70 yards, edging No Help by a neck in the final strides to return $8.40 on the win end.

It was the second win for Coulea Sage in two starts at the meeting. Mrs. Ian Ross, wife of the managing director of Butchart's Gardens, presented the trophy and replica to the winning owner. Coulea Sage was ridden by jockey John Hocken.

The jockey championship, and with it a wrist watch, was won by Garth Carter. The trainer championship went to Les Mattoon on the strength of a victory by Glenlyon Mac on the final race of the meet over one mile and three-eights. First Contact was second for the final exacto of $111.20.

For Carter, it was a deserving win. He went into the final day leading by three victories over apprentice Craig Miller.

Miller won the first race on Tough Boss ($4.00) to close the gap to two. Then in the second it appeared that Carter may have lost his chance. There was a spectacular spill when Weed Song apparently interfered with Dazzling Dixie, ridden by John Hocken, and Country Wine, ridden by Carter on the clubhouse turn, both jockeys being unseated. However, both were uninjured and returned to ride later and successfully, too. Carter was up on Costarule, a three-year-old bay gelding in a wire-to-wire performance in the fifth. Hocken was up on Coulea Sage in the featured Island championship.

There was one disqualification, the second of the meeting. That occurred in the fourth race.

Hocken, riding Pacific Rim, the apparent winner, was detected as having hit Bald Headed, the second finisher, in the head during the stretch drive and was disqualified from first to second for the infraction.

A mild upset took place in the second, possibly because of the spill, when Hidden Lake took the early lead and lasted to win over Towner Park to return $34.30 for a $2 win ticket and the pair combining for a quinella payoff of $217.20.

Capital City Turf Club directors issued a statement following the meeting thanking the people of Victoria for their enthusiastic support of the meeting and, as intimated earlier, bigger and better things are planned for next fall.

It was also announced that the CCTC would endeavour to get an earlier start next fall. But whether this is possible is not known at this time.

It is also thought that there could be more horses next fall because this year's meeting has been such a success. For example, the minimum purse here was $800 but because of the wagering it will more than likely work out to around $1,150 or $1,200.

As for next season, the CCTC has two years remaining on the present lease with the B.C. Jockey Club and, understandably flushed by the response this fall, doesn't intend to let the matter stop there.

Or as Popham and Harknett both suggested: "We know now that people here want, and will support, thoroughbred horse racing, and that's all we wanted to know. We definitely will be back next fall and we have some plans already under way.

Catherine Zeek, one of the girls on the backstretch, won the trip for two to Hawaii, donated by the Capital City Turf Club and she announced she will take her mother, Pat Hayes, of the Lazy Hayzee Ranch with her on the trip.

Uncashed mutuel tickets may be cashed at Harknet Fuel, 2333 Government Street.

TIDE TRIUMPHS ON GREIG'S BOOT

VANCOUVER — Victoria Crimson Tide took a giant step toward regaining the McKechnie Cup, symbolic of inter-union rugby supremacy in the province, by downing Vancouver Reps 3-0 Tuesday in a rain-splattered game at Brockton Oval.

After a ver yeven first half, standing-half Gillie Greig booted a penalty goal midway through the second half to give the Islanders their narrow victory.

Sigurdson Rink Takes Playland Bonspiel Honors

Gary Sigurdson of Vancouver defeated Jake Block of Abbotsford 6-4 Tuesday to win first place and the $2,500 prize that went with it in the annual Playland Curling Club cash bonspiel.

Block, who was seeking his second title, received $1,200 for runner-up honors.

Harry Gulka of Playland defeated clubmate Bob Gallaugher, 7-6, in the consolation final for third place. Gulka's rink took home $500 and Gallaugher's $400.

The other four finalists, Monte Olson and Max Gordon of Vancouver, Norm Thiessen of Nanaimo and Jim Gallaugher of Playland each won $200.

Sigurdson, who slipped into the final round on Sunday by scoring four on the final end against Dave Johnston of Victoria, advanced to the final Tuesday with victories over Gordon, 7-6 and Bob Gallaugher, 11-7.

Block defeated Olson 6-4 and Gulka 10-2 on his way to the final. In other final round matches, Bob Gallaugher defeated Thiessen 8-3 and Gulka won from Jim Gallaugher 6-2.

Other members of Sigurdson's rink were Ron Trottier, Dale Walker and Don Patterson. Curling with Block were Chuck Kennedy, Al Graham and Bruce Bacon.

Perfect Records Fall in Running

Two changes in otherwise unblemished records occurred Monday during the eighth and final race of the Greater Victoria High School Cross-Country League schedule at Royal Roads Military College.

Debbie Scott of Claremont lost her first race of the season but still managed to claim the over-all title. Sharon Doherty of Esquimalt won the 2.5-mile test, Cheryl Matthews of Esquimalt placed second and Miss Scott was third. Miss Doherty won last week's race as well but Miss Scott didn't compete because of an injury.

Esquimalt boys' team, too, suffered its first defeat of the season. Depleted by illness and injury, the Esquimalt squad finished third in the final race but still won the league title.

Jon Smith of Oak Bay completed an unbeaten season by winning the 4.5-mile boys' event and the Esquimalt girls topped their division with an undefeated record for the second successive season.

Cougars Discover Balance

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

As a result of injuries and the usual early-season snuffling, the Victoria Cougar lineup has undergone almost constant changes to this point of the Western Canada Hockey League season.

Now, and on the heels of Tuesday's 5-1 victory over Lethbridge Broncos, coach Pat Ginnell is anxious to have a long, second look at his latest formations.

It may be worthwhile.

From goal out, the Cougars had a look of solidarity and overall balance as they defeated the Broncos before 3,815 Memorial Arena customers.

From a standpoint of balance and performance for 60 minutes, their latest effort could be Cougars' best of the season.

Balance was especially evident among the forwards. All four Victoria lines performed well. Their attention to checking was particularly impressive.

The defence looked better because of the good checking up front, and the only unfortunate aspect of the game was the fact that goaltender Murray Bannerman failed to record a shutout. He deserved one.

However, Ginnell may supply Bannerman with a better reward, meaning permanent employment. Obtained from Winnipeg Clubs on a make-good basis, Bannerman has given up only three goals in his two successful starts with the Cougars.

He can play one more trial game, but Ginnell hinted broadly Tuesday that Bannerman may have won himself a job.

Getting superb support from Victoria's penalty-killing units, Bannerman was solid. He made several fine stops when a Lethbridge goal conceivably could have altered the complexion of the game.

He stopped two breakaways but was sharpest, along with the penalty-killers, when Lethbridge twice held a two-man advantage but failed to score. Victoria winger Jeff McDill drew a high-sticking minor at 2:13 of the opening period and Cougars were slapped with a bench minor when he failed to go directly to the penalty box.

Cougars held out for the two minutes, thanks to the efforts of Tim Williams, Lorry Gloeckner, Don Johnson, Jim Gustafson and Curt Fraser.

Cougars, in command 5-0, also weathered another minute and 25 seconds with a two-man disadvantage when Al Hill and Johnson took successive penalties in the third period.

Another penalty to Johnson a few minutes later allowed Broncos a chance to spoil Bannerman's shutout bid. Darcy Reiger, playing despite a cracked jawbone, scored the Lethbridge goal at 13:21 of the third period.

It was the only flaw in Victoria's defensive performance.

Referee Bruce Garside called 12 minors against Victoria and six against Lethbridge. Victoria drew four of the minors in the last 10 minutes of the game, a timing factor that has to be questioned by the shoutout-minded.

Despite the one letdown, the penalty-killers were outstanding. Figuring strongly in that department were Brent Kristoff and John Gordon, who played their second games with the Cougars after being brought up from Nanaimo Clippers of the B.C. Junior League.

McDill led the attack with his 17th and 18th goals of the season. Williams, Fraser and Greg Anderson scored the others.

The rookie Anderson now has connected for a goal in each of his least three games. Teamed with Dennis Fenske and Rick Rurston, the unit gave Ginnell a strong third unit.

Also noteworthy was the play of the Hill-Fraser-Dale Ewasiuk line. Ewasiuk, also recalled from Nanaimo recently, looked right at home with his new linemates after changing positions with Durston.

In other games Tuesday, Brandon Wheat Kings snapped a seven-game losing streak by blanking Winnipeg Clubs 5-0 and winger Don Murdoch fired his 22nd and 23rd goals to lead Medicine Hat Tigers to a 6-2 win over Edmonton Oil Kings. Flin Flon Bombers defeated Regina Pats 6-4 Monday.

BAR MITZVAH LANDS POP IN COURT

NEW YORK (AP) — A Manhattan Federal Court jury has convicted Leon Greenberg, general manager of Monticello Raceway, of conspiracy and fraud. The verdict involved charges that Greenberg, 49, who is also president of the Sullivan County Harness Racing Association, illegially had the track pay most of the bill for his son's Bar Mitzvah at a Catskills' Mountain resort hotel in 1970. Greenberg will be sentenced Jan. 14.

Not One Difficult Shot Says Dryden of Shutout

By The Candadian Press

Goaltender Ken Dryden of Montreal Canadiens found the going a little too easy in registering his second shutout of the season Tuesday night, a 6-0 waltz over Minnesota North stars in one of four National Hockey League games.

"I'd like to be able to say I had a difficult shot to stop, but I can't," said Dryden, who faced only 14 Minnesota drives. "I can't just invent shots that weren't there."

In other games, St. Louis Blues dumped New York Rangers 5-3, Vancouver Canucks edged Toronto Maple Leafs 3-2 and California Seals clipped Los Angeles Kings 3-2.

Dryden was called upon the make tree saves in the first period and two in the second before the North Stars opened up with nine shots in the final frame at Montreal.

"Of course, you have to take shutouts, because they're a goal that goaltenders are always trying to reach, but I must say I don't hold much satisfaction in this one," Dryden said. "It would have been very hard for us not to get a shutout tonight."

Guy Lafleur and Mario Tremblay scored two goals apiece for the Canadiens, and Steve Shutt and John Van Boxmeer added one each. Van Boxmeer's coming on an 80-foot drive in the first period that Minnesota goalie Cesare Maniago stopped and then watched trickle past him.

Lafleur was honored before the game with Maurice Rocket Richard and Bernie Boom-Boom Geoffrion as the only Canadiens ever to score 50 goals in a season. Richard scored 50 in 50 games in 1944-45, Geoffrion 50 in a 70-game schedule in 1960-61 and Lafleur 53 in 80 games last year.

Lafleur's pair against Minnesota gave him 13 in 15 games this year and helped the Canadiens move into first place in the Norris Division, a point ahead of Los Angeles.

At St. Louis, Blues goalie Yves Belanger turned in 22 saves in the last two periods as the Rangers suffered their fifth defeat in six games.

Wayne Dillon, with two goals, and Rod Gilbert connected for New York in the first period against Gilles Gratton. Chuck Lefley scored twice for the Blues, while Floyd Thomson scored the winner against Rangers goalie John Davidson at 2:20 of the third period. Wayne Morrick hit for St. Louis in the first period and former Ranger Derek Sanderson beat Davidson in the final minute.

John Gould, with assists from Chris Oddleifson, scored three Vancouver goals against Toronto.

The third goal broke a 2-2 tie and came when Gould stickhandled in from the right wing and beat Toronto goalie Gord McRae from 30 feet at 11:05 of the final period. Ken Lockett made 31 saves for the Canucks, who had 19 shots at McRae.

Defenceman Rick Hampton scored the Seals' winning goal on a 45-foot slap shot at 1:52 of the third period at Los Angeles, handing the Kings their first home-ice loss this season and snapping their seven-game unbeaten string.

The Seals, who had not beaten the Kings in their last four meetings, got other goals from Larry Patey and Gary Sabourin, while Bob Berry and Butch Goring's breakaway provided the Kings goals.

Toros Are Trying But Still Failing

By The Canadian Press

Toronto Toros are taking too much time getting started.

For the third game in a row, the Toros staged a third-period comeback that fell short.

Goals by Frank Mahovlich and Jim Dorey in the final six minutes left Toronto with a 5-4 loss to Houston Aeros in a World Hockey Association game at Houston

The loss was the fifth in a row for the Toros and the fifth by one goal in the team's dozen games this season.

In other games Tuesday, Calgary Cowboys ran their unbeaten streak to five games by defeating Edmonton Oilers 6-3; Rejean Houle scored three times and set up two goals as Quebec Nordiques outlasted Minnesota Fighting Saints 8-6, and defenceman Paul Shmyr's first goal of the season, coming with only eight seconds left in regulation time, provided Cleveland Crusaders with a 3-2 win over Winnipeg Jets.

College Football Suspension Lifted

Times News Services

University of Windsor Lancers expect to find out today if they can enter the Canadian college football playoffs.

Lancers were suspended earlier in the season for using quarterback Don Pickett, who had used up his five years of eligibility, and launched a restraining order against the ban imposed by the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union.

The CIAU Tuesday lifted the suspension and planned to meet with Windsor officials in Toronto today following a promised court decision on the restraining order.

Despite the CIAU ban, Lancers were allowed to continue play in their conference and won the title by beating Wilfred Laurier Golden Hawks of Waterloo, Ont., while using backup quarterback Bruce Walker.

If the court and the CIAU rule in their favor, Lancers will meet Ottawa Gee-Gees in the Central Bowl Sunday for the right to advance to the College Bowl, the national final, against Calgary Dinosaurs or Acadia Axemen who meet in the Atlantic Bowl Saturday in Wolfeville, N.S.

Vikings: A Canadian Title Won by Canadian Players

jim crerar

Mike Elcock, sports and recreation manager at the University of Victoria, climbed up on a bench in the dressing room Sunday and waited patiently for the din to subside.

The Vikings had just won a national college soccer championship at Centennial Stadium and the inevitable pandemonium was reigning. At last there was a lull and Elcock spoke up.

"The first round is on me," he shouted, referring to post-game celebrations that were to continue after the players had showered and dressed. The cheering broke out again.

Not everyone was noisy, though. Coach Brian Hughes was content to stand quietly to one side of the room, enjoying the player's enthusiasm, accepting congratulations and answering reporters' questions.

Yes, Hughes agreed, midfielder Brian Barraclough played a fine game indeed. He was all over the field, scoring Vikings' all-important first goal, then turning in a superb two-way effort that repeatedly broke up opposition plays and set up his teammates.

And, yes, Hughes was especially pleased with the way the team had jelled in time for the playoffs. Cohesion and spirit were words he used.

Then, almost as an afterthought, he made one of the more interesting observations of the three-day tournament. Noting that the other four teams contained players who had learned the game in Great Britain, on the Continent and in the West Indies, Hughes said he was especially gratified to see Vikings win with a team of players almost all of whom learned the game on Vancouver Island.

A former Welsh international, Hughes wasn't being parochial. He was merely pleased to see a Canadian championship won by a Canadian team.

Even so, Vikings' success is eloquent testimony to the calibre of soccer on the West Coast, where climate and tradition have provided an advantage over other areas of the country.

And UVic's championship reflects favorably on the development of soccer players in the schools and the Lower Island Juvenile Association. Most of the Vikings came up through those ranks, so there are undoubtedly a number of coaches who also deserve a share of the credit.

One of Vikings who learned the game in Victoria is Danny Lomas, the team's leading forward who stepped into goal as a replacement for injured Mike Armstrong in Sunday's 2-1 win over Concordia of Montreal. It marked the first time in three years Lomas had played the position.

"I always have fun playing goal," Lomas said, "and I had fun today."

That is what scholastic sport is all about—or should be. You can have fun and still win.

PLEASE DO THIS FOR US, AND HELP US GET RID OF THIS BURDEN FORCED UPON UB. ARE YOU AWARE THAT IN ADDITION TO FOUR LARGER SHIPS AND NUMEROUS SMALLER VESSELS

Four (4) HELICOPTERS

Are soon to be stationed on the old V.M.D. Site?!!!!!

In Addition To AEROPLANES

Hundreds of flights roaring over our heads, what kind of a city would Victoria turn out to be? Victoria the Beautiful, the City we loved, and came here to live in because it was quiet and decent; it's even now not as beautiful and peaceful as it used to be (Aeroplane noise).

Alderman Mike Young, along with the present city council (and that includes Mayor Peter Pollen) voted in favour of extending the lease for the operation of these aeroplanes and thus forcing this shameful curse upon us. Mr. Mike Young says, nothing can be done about it!! Incredible! Such a statement from a person, elected to do good for you!!!

I WILL STOP ALL OF THIS CURSED NOISE, AND DANGER!!! (To think that Council was even discussing four-engined aeroplanes!!) (Shameful!).

Mayor Pollen suggested Mr. Young as his choice for Mayor. In accomplishing the above, misery, noise and danger were added to us citizens of this city by his and his councils actions, perhaps this is what he considers intelligence. Some of the large and ridiculous expenditures both he and Mr. Young voted for, must also be examples of Remarkable Capabilities! I challenge Mr. Pollen to a public debate anytime concerning the issues. With innuendo he ridiculed me. Aside from his ego I will pit my knowledge (concerning this city) against his anytime, anyplace.

Car Racing Official Retires

Frank Kittto, a driver and official in Vancouver Island stock car racing for more than a quarter of a century, has retired.

An original member of the Vancouver Island Track Racing Association, Kitto served as back gate man and, for the last eight years, was head pit boss at Western Speedway.

He and Phil Hendry, another original VITRA member, were awarded life memberships at the organization's 25th anniversary dinner recently.

Hendry, who plans to continue in auto racing, served as VITRA's official race starter for 18 years before relinquishing the post two years ago.

Skater Breaks Three Records

Brenda Shields of Esquimalt established three provincial records and Orrisa Fletcher of Mission accounted for two others in an inter-club speedskating meet Tuesday at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Winner of the midget girls' class, Shields established her marks in the 200 (24.6 seconds), 400 (48.4) and 500 (1:00.8) metres. The Mission miss, winner of the juvenile girls' class, sped to records in the 200 (23.4) and 400 (47.0) metre events.

Other Esquimalt class champions were Reg Carson (peewee boys), Shawn Hobday (midget boys) and Keith Robinson (juvenile boys).

Mission captured over-all team honors with 231½ points. Esquimalt was runner-up with 197½, followed by Burnaby Haida (84) and Abbotsford (54).

A noticeable absentee was Esquimalt's Dave Shields, currently training with the national junior team in Lethbridge.

Boxers Down Bays

Oak Bay played well for 60 minutes, but Tuesday's Premier Division match in the Vancouver Island Soccer League happened to be a 90-minute engagement.

London Boxing Club scored three goals in the final minutes to score a 5-2 victory over Oak Bay at Topaz Park. The win boosted the unbeaten Boxers, Canada's senior champions, into a first-place tie with Powell River.

Boxers led 2-1 at the half but Barry Moen equalized in the 52nd minute before Oak Bay seemed to tire in the final 30 minutes. John Hughes was credited with Oak Bay's first goal, which actually was scored by a Boxing Club defender.

Bob Bolitho and George Pakos each scored twice for Boxers while Steve Carroll added the other. Bolith counted his second goal — and the game's final one — on a penalty.

Heywood Meeting

The annual meeting of the Heywood Men's Softball League will take place Sunday at 8 p.m. at the Chief Petty Officers' Mess on Esquimalt Road. Officers will be elected.

de Goede's Late Throw Does Trick

You can't blame Jim Cunningham and Tom Carson for wondering about justice in sports.

Each contribution 27 points for Steven's Interiors but a rival who counted only five emerged as the hero of Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basketball League game Monday.

Hand de Goede hit his fifth point, a foul shot, with only four seconds left to give James Bay an 86-85 victory over Steven's. Harry Hunter topped the Bays with 19 points while Tony Anderson (16), Mike Morrill (14) and John Campbell (14)) also hit for double figures.

In another game, Drew Thompson and Rich Harris both counted 14 to spark Independents to a 76-74 win over Victoria Juniors. Bruce Lubinich led Juniors with 13.

Cowboys Fumble It Away

DALLAS (AP) — Kansas City Chiefs may not be Super Bowl material, as their rookie coach Paul Wiggin says, but they were tops at recovering fumbles Monday night.

Kansas City and Dallas Cowboys fumbled 12 times in a National Football League game. The Chiefs got back three of their mistakes and pocketed all five of the Dallas miscues, cashing three of them into touchdowns.

The result was a 34-31 victory over the Cowboys and Wiggin found it all a little difficult to believe.

Kansas City now is 4-4 and still alive in the American Conference Western Division.

Equestrian Coach Quits

OTTAWA (CP) — Sheila Wilcox has quit as coach of Canada's equestrian three-day event team because of disagreements with team members.

Grahame Inglis, executive director of the National Equestrian Federation, said that Miss Wilcox said a few months ago that she was having disagreements with Jim Day, one of Canada's top jumpers who had switched to the three-day event.

Miss Wilcox, who joined the team seven months ago, has returned to England. She quit the team soon after it won a silver medal in the Pan-American Games in Mexico City.

Shawnigan Wins Four of Seven Rugby Matches

St. Georges won the under-16 (13-6), the under-15 (31-0) and the under-14 (29-0) matches.

Pair on Waivers

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Falcons of the National Football League have placed wide receiver Gerald Tinker and running back Oscar Reed on waivers.

In his campaign to be Morning Mayor of Victoria, Barry Bowman of C-FAX has kissed many a baby and shaken many a hand. As you can see, Bowman supporters are no dummies.

VOTE
H. BITTERMAN X

I don't promise, large doses of fluent grammar, and a continuing increase in taxes, and "Reid Centre" promises not kept!! I promise to be a "Touchable" — "Peoples Mayor" talking on your level; and fighting together with you. Together we will make this even a more beautiful, QUIETER, and safer city, in which to live.

Let's get these taxes and rents down, and stop "Mall" spending, and foolish expenditures such as that. (The shop owners, almost all of them, don't like it anyway). And you don't either, as your taxes go up!!

BETTER POLICE PROTECTION—MORE CARE FOR 'PEOPLE'

I will be 'open' to your ideas too. I sincerely and urgently ask for your vote.

The basics of Christian morality and standards should be kept as high as possible, in City Hall (and throughout the city) even with a world slowly crumbling around us.

RACING TEAMS ASK 'ASTRONOMICAL' FEES

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The chief organizer of West Gernany's famed Nuerburgring Grand Prix has repeated threats to turn the 1976 race into a Formula II event because of "astronomical" starting fees demanded by Formula I teams.

Herbert Schmitz, racing secretary of the Automobile Club of Germany, said: "We can't pay what the team directors are demanding."

The Formula I Association wants $250,000 plus $1 for each paying customer next year. In 1975, the Formula I teams got $196,000 for each event.

Court Told of Bloody Footprints

Isabel Jane Plume, 51, was stabbed 47 times.

Her fellow worker in an Esquimalt corner store, Isabel Florence Bevan, 62, was stabbed 20 times.

The blows which produced the wounds were inflicted "with considerable force," pathologist Dr. John Marsden told B.C. Supreme Court Monday.

Both women suffered skull fractures as well as broken ribs and injured lungs, he testified.

Larry Lovell, 21, of CFB Esquimalt, is accused of murder punishable by life imprisonment in the deaths of both women Sept. 6, 1974, at Ray's Food Store, 1325 Esquimalt Road.

Dr. Marsden said the wounds to both women were "striking similar" and in his opinion all of them could have been made by one sharp instrument

Bernard Brennan, formerly in charge of the Victoria police identification section, said he saw blood-stained footprints from the storeroom where the bodies were found towards the front door where they stopped abruptly.

He examined a pair of shoes brought to him by an Esquimalt policeman but in his opinion they didn't match the prints on the floor.

Dr. Robert Conn said he was called to the scene and pronounced the women dead.

He said he couldn't give a specific time when he arrived but he estimated the women had been dead half an hour, possibly longer.

Esquimalt police Constable William Wyatt, who was at the scene, said Dr. Conn made the examination of the women at about 2:45 p.m.

He also testified he was at the Naden hospital where Lovell was a patient Sept. 24, 1974, and witnessed the accused opening a package containing shoes.

Wyatt examined the shoes and concluded there was "no way" they could have made the marks in the corner store.

Store owner Archie Raymond Squires said he worked at the store in the morning, left at 1:05 p.m. and returned at 3 p.m. to find it surrounded by police.

He said about $80 in the cash register when he left was missing.

Christine Green, who lived across the street from the store, said she and a friend went there about 2:15 p.m. but found the door locked which was unusual.

They went back across the street where she made a phone call from a neighbor's house and then noticed a "stout, older man" go towards the front door of the store.

She and her friend went to her apartment to get some pop bottles and went into the store at 2:25 to 2:30 p.m. and they saw the dead women on the floor.

They ran from the store, told a neighbor, James denham, who called police

She said the "stout, older man" was about 60 years old and did not resemble the accused.

Robert Colpman of the Canadian Navy said he served with Lovel aboard HMCS Qu'Appelle from February to September, 1974.

He was walking along Esquimalt Road Sept. 6, 1974, when he met Lovell 30 to 40 feet from Ray's store about 2 p.m.

"He was sitting on a fence, his head in his hands," he said.

"I said: 'What the hell are you doing here Lovell, having a little snooze?' He said: 'Yes, I'm tired.'"

(Court was told earlier Lovell lived about half a block from the store at the time.)

The trial, before Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie and a jury of nine men and three women, continued today.

Lovell is represented by Harry Rankin, assisted by Rick Peck.

Crown counsel is Wally Anderson, assisted by Don Laughton

The trial, which is expected to continue into the early part of next week, filled all 14 public seats. Standing room for the public is not permitted.

The trickiest part of the men's wear business is spotting a trend.

It takes a keen eye and experience. An intuition that tells you whether it's going to make it as a fashion look or become just another 'here today gone tomorrow'.

And it takes guts. Some shops will buy a bit of this and bit of that and try to touch all the bases. They play it safe.

Which explains why you won't find a selection of Donegal tweed suits anywhere else like you'll find at Tip Top.

This suit gets its character from its cloth. A comfortable combination of rugged good looks without a heavy feel of bulky tweed.

Its country appearance finds perfect harmony with tailoring touches like the boldly patched pockets, the bold stitching and the real leather buttons.

In your suit wardrobe it makes a lovely alternative to the days when you don't feel like wearing flannel.

Its colours are based on natural tones of blues and browns, each suit slightly different according to the speckles in the cloth.

The regular price of our Henley Donegal tweed suits will be $164.95. But as usual, the first four days on our racks will see it reduced to $139.96.

If other shops had it, their price would be much higher. But of course they haven't got it. They're waiting for us to set the trend.

FOR 4 DAYS ONLY $139.96

Toughest Gun Law Has Little Effect

BOSTON (WP) — The toughest gun control law in the nation, a Massachusetts statute that mandates an automatic one-year prison sentence for carrying a handgun without a licence, has had little effect here in its first six months.

According to Boston Police Department figures, the sumber of reported murders, robberies, and assaults committed with a handgun from April, when the law was implemented, through September is about the same as the number in the same period last year.

Twenty-six of 61 murders were committed with a handgun in that period this year compared with 26 of 59 last year. The armed robberies decreased slightly from 953 to 939 and assaults with guns decreased from 313 to 261, drops that police officials say are too small to be significant or to attribute to any one factor.

The law was rushed through the legislature last year with the support of most gun clubs and police associations in the state, but its greatest detractors have been some of the state's leading gun control advocates, who argue that mandatory sentences are ineffective.

Ernest Windsor, a staff attorney for the Massachusetts Law Reform Institute, said also that the mandatory provision "perverts the judicial system", by forcing judges either to impose prison terms or circumvent the law when mercy seems more appropriate.

For example, in August Bessie Stanton, a 70-year-old evangelist who was arrested for having a derringer in her shopping bag, was released after the judge ruled that the search was illegal.

The number of arrests and convictions in the state under the law has not been compiled yet, state police and court officials say.

But now the law is being challenged in the courts as unconstitutional, and even the state chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, a leader in the fight for gun control, is likely to join the case to argue that it violates both the state and national constitutions, a spokesman for the organization said.

The case involves Angelo Jackson, 20, who was arrested in Boston for carrying a handgun without a licence. Defence attorney Lawrence A. Shubon argued in Suffolk County Superior Court for dismissal on grounds that the mandatory sentence violates the power of the state judiciary, is "cruel and unusual punishment" for simply not getting a licence, and violates the defendant's protection under due process of law by not requiring proof of criminal intent.

But Suffolk County Assistant District Attorney Richard Yoke argued that mandatory sentences are required for other crimes such as breaking food and drug regulations that do not require a criminal intent. He added in an interview that "the certainty of punishment is necessary as a deterrent."

Boston Police Commissioner Robert J. DiGrazia, who wants to ban handguns, says the new penalty law has "no deterrent effect whatsoever."

"It is another half-way measure that tries to satisfy the anti-gun-control lobby," he said. "But if someone wants to use a weapon, he's going to use it."

DiGrazia is leading a petition drive to place a proposal on the state ballot next year that would ban handguns from all but the police and military. A legislative aide to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said the governor "in all likelihood' will also file a bill next year to ban handguns.

Cosmetic Lotion Pulled Off Market

OTTAWA (CP) — A cosmetic lotion which caused a Quebec man to develop breasts and become impotent is being voluntarily called off the market, the federal health protection branch has announced.

The lotions, called "P1 Paracne Dr. Mareel" and P Paracne Dr. Mareel" are manufactured by Interchim Cosmetique Corp. of Ste-Foy, Que.

(In Victoria, spokesmen in the cosmetic departments of two major stores said they do not carry the product.)

The lotions contain about 3.5 milligrams per millilitre of diethylstilbestrol DES, a prescription drug.

No mention is made on the labels of the presence of DES, which has been found to be cancer-causing in some animal tests.

"Consumers using these lotions according to package directions would be exposed to the potential absorption of up to 800 milligrams of DES in an eight-day period," the health protection branch said in a news release. "... absorption of large doses could result in serious health hazards to both men and women, particularly as it affects their reproductive organs and breasts. Fetuses of pregnant women may also be affected."

"Pregnant women who have used these lotions are advised to contact their physicians," the news release says.

SNOW RUINS BAKER GAUGE

SEATTLE (AP) — Heavy snow has ruined an instrument monitoring Mount Baker's steaming Sherman Crater, says a University of Washington geophysicist.

The instrument, measuring the gas output of a steam vent in the crater, is one of many checking activity on the volcanic mountain.

BANDIT TEAM 'REAL AMATEUR'

MONTREAL (UP) — Bandits, like people in other fields of endeavor, can be classified as either amateurs or professionals.

Leon Hacker of suburban Montreal is convinced the two young men in ski masks who entered his home Saturday fall into the category of amateurs.

Surprised by Hacker's wife in the hallway, two young men "just scrammed," said Hacker, but not before one apparently shot his accomplice in the leg by mistake.

"I only saw one guy when I came in from the back room and I guess he must have been a real amateur," Hacker continued, laughing at the incident later.

"He reminded me of Don Knotts (who played a bumbling sherriff's deputy in the Mayberry television show)," Hacker said. "He didn't even point his gun and it went off.

"He found some blood and my wife saw one of the two running away limping. So I think the guy probably shot his buddy."

Hacker, 50, a renovations contractor, said he was watching the Saturday night hockey game when roused by his wife's sream of "call the police."

Hacker's wife was out when the bandits entered by the front door. She arrived home just in time to surprise them in the hallway.

Author's Western Shores Distilled View of Coast

By AB KENT
Times Staff

To photo-journalist Ted Spiegel the British Columbia coast is like a mistress of his youth. He still loves her enough to return to her delights.

But New Jersey-born Spiegel remains aloof enough to reside a continent away in East Salem, N.Y. — in a house of western red cedar.

The love affair began 15 years ago when Spiegel was based in Seattle for a time and began his many visits to the communities, fishing and logging inlets, offshore islands and coastal mountains that were to stretch through the years.

For two of those years he was on cableship duty in the army, working southeast Alaska and was frequently in the Inside Passage renowned by cruise tourists. He honeymooned on the big blue and white ferry between Kelsey Bay and Prince Rupert.

And his first assignment to B.C. was to Vancouver where he photographed a rotogravure section for the Seattle Times. "I've been coming back ever since."

The book took a year to make, but in a sense Spiegel has researched the B.C. coast for 15 years and he now has a distilled view of its character which he calls Western Shores.

This glossy, coffee table-size volume is more than half photographs — all colored — and the text is in large, modern type on buff pages. As researcher, writer, photographer and designer, Spiegel was intimately involved in each stage of production and is now launching it on behalf of publisher McClelland and Stewart Ltd.

"I tried to do a book with sound and image," he said in Victoria this week.

Besides the pictures, which clearly reveal Spiegel's background as a photo-essayist for National Geographic and Time-Life Inc., something of the spirit of the people and their occupations emanates from the writing.

He said he wanted to convey feeling as well as to evoke something in the reader — a two-way exchange.

"The feelings and thoughts of about 50 people on this coast" are in the book, "the kind of coffee table book I'd like people to sit down over coffee and talk about."

Spiegel is 41 and an active man. He has visited more than 50 countries on picture-taking assignments and in 1971 he was the feature photo choice in Pictures of the Year Contest. He also spends summers in Norway, his wife's birthplace.

Spiegel calls Western Shores, naturally enough, an active book.

It is his sixth, it is technically beautiful and the prose is in winning style, but the author said he is not concerned about its success.

"I'm not worried about what someone thinks from a commercial point of view," he said.

"It is an area about which a book needed to be done and I felt I needed, personally, to write it because I love this coast."

He has written a visual narrative containing four themes beginning with the primeval "most ancient sound," the coast as it was known only to the birds and sea creatures; then the people who came to know its bounty; the industry which has developed from the sea, the forest and the mountains; and finally, the cities of Victoria and Vancouver, that Spiegel calls "a beacon in the night."

Taken together — nature, part of our lives. It's part of being happy."

And from Victorians who find a place among the pages:

Geologist Stuart Holland describing the land during the ice age: "It was really very quiet. The sound of time was rain and snow and the odd crunch. Erosion doesn't sound like a fellow rasping a piece of metal, but ice is doing much the same thing. It's got a whole bunch of teeth. The rocks it pushes along are like cutting tools, and the glaciers are scouring out the valleys ..."

Or Bristol Foster, biologist and head of the provincial ecological reserve system, speculating on the sea before there was life: "Sometimes it's roaring, sometimes it's gurgling ... even when it's dead calm there's always at least a gurgle. And I think before there was any life there must have been waves and gurgles. Along with the roar of volcanoes, it must be the most ancient sound."

men and their interaction — they form an ecosystem, Western Shores.

Spiegel said he wants his readers to react to their own And he makes the point that the coast belongs not just to British Columbians.

"This is Saskatchewan's coast, too," he said.

And it's true. He has a picture of a man and his young son, a solitary pair on a sundown beach discovering the joy of sand and saltwater sluicing around their ankles. They are from Saskatchewan, where even the firmest of roots come to know their kinship with the sea.

Spiegel's pictures tend to dominate the book. He is first of all a photo-journalist and believes that the picture must tell the story. But as "a book of second thoughts" he thinks it should invite the reader to look, then come back and think about it.

The text will encourage this. For example, Spiegel describes a self-dumping log carrier:

"... these towering devices deliver their load of 20,000 tons by harnessing the sea. Slowly, the ballast tanks on one side of the barge are filled; the load tilts, creaks and slides off into the water. A giant wave is launched as a forest is delivered."

Karen Johnson, a young Indian, talks about the oolachen runs on her native Nass:

"The oolichan are full of grease and you use this grease for cooking, and you eat it, just like a dip. But it's more than just grease; it's

TIME LOST DOWN 38%

OTTAWA (CP) — Time lost due to strikes and lockouts during the first seven months of the year was about 38 per cent less than the total for the same period last year, the labor department reports.

The time loss for the January-July period was 4,703,5990 mandays, or 39 days for every 10,000 worked. During the same period in 1974 time lost due to work stoppages totalled 6,297,630 man-days, or 54 for every 10,000 worked.

This year's total included 1,021,110 man-days lost in July due to 273 work stoppages. This compares with a June total of 839,410 lost man-days and 1,021,110 man-days in July, 1974.

A labor department spokesman said the cumulative 1975 total will be affected by increased August and September time-loss figures due to a shutdown of the British Columbia forest industry which the B.C. government ended in October by legislating strikers back to work.

In 1974, the 12-month time loss was a record 9,255,120 man-days, or 46 for each 10,000 worked. Canada was second only to Italy in man-days lost in an International Labor Organization survey of statistics for 1973.

Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich will address the Saanich and the Islands NDP nomination meeting tonight at 8 p.m. at Keating elementary school. Two candidates, Carol Pickup and Dr. Phillip Ney are competing for the nomination.

Up-Island an independent candidate has emerged to seek the seat in Cowichan-Malahat, vacated by former Transport Minister Bob Strachan.

Publisher Andy Bigg announced Monday he has disposed of his interest in The Pictorial and Cowichan Leader newspappers because "it is only fair to disassociate myself from any possible conflict of interest."

The sale was made to Westpres Ltd., owners of the Parksville Progress weekly newspaper.

"For more than 20 years I'd hoped the day would arrive when I would have the opportunity to stand as a true nonpartisan, independent candidate in the Cowichan-Malahat constituency and it now appears that day has arrived," Bigg said.

NEW QUEBEC PARTY?

MONTREAL — Jerome Choquette, former justice and education minister in Premier Robert Bourassa's Liberal government, Tuesday called for the formation of a new political party for Quebec.

"The national aspirations of Quebec are not represented by the main parties now on the scene — the Liberal party and the opposition Parti Quebecois," Choquette told an audience of about 850 at a Chamber of Commerce Luncheon.

In his first public statement since his split with cabinet and party Sept. 26, he confirmed six weeks of speculation that he was prepared to lend his support to a political "third force," promoted by elements of the decimated Creditiste and Union Nationale parties.

Rhododendrons Given to UVic

A major rhododendron collection has been donated by plant collector Edmund Lohbrunner to the University of Victoria's new University Gardens.

Frederick A. Firth, chairman of the newly-formed Garden Friends of the University, said the plants will be added to another rare collection of about 350 rhododendron species bequeathed some time ago to the university by the late Mrs. Jeanne Simpson of Lake Cowichan.

She died in 1973 at the age of 87, leaving her 20-acre property with 3,000 feet of waterfront, plus her plant collection, to UVic.

Firth, a long-time member of the Victoria Horticultural Society, said the new donation means the university is well on its way to establishing a unique garden, one of the best of its kind in the Pacific Northwest.

"Already UVic has one of the most prominent collections of rhododendrons in North America," he said. "It won't belong before horticulturists, botanists and gardeners from all parts of North America and other countries will be coming to Victoria to see the University Gardens."

He observed from the Simpson collection alone, 60 of the species are listed as rare and two may be extinct.

Lohbrunner, an authority on alpine and rock garden plants who was the first Canadian to win the American Rock Garden Society's Marcel Le Piniec award, donated both rhododendron species and some outstanding hybrids.

His collection comes mainly from American expeditions under Dr. Joseph J. Rock made in the early 1940s in Burma, northern China, Tibet and Siam.

Meanwhile, a study of the Simpson collection has disclosed that many of the rare species were grown from seeds by Dr. R. N. Stoker and his wife, outstanding naturalists and plant collectors, who seemed to have beeen almost forgotten.

Dr. Stoker came from a distinguished Irish family and served with the Bengal Native Infantry in India before coming to Vancouver Island in 1893. His brother was the author of the hair-raising novel Dracula.

Review Publisher Survives Sea Storm

Sidney Review publisher John Manning is again on his way to Victoria after being forced to take shelter in his newly-acquired 47-foot cutter Gungha at Coos Bay near the California-Oregon border.

Catherine Reilly, 22, of Sindey sailed from Eureka, Calif. with Manning and was aboard Gungha when the boat ran into one of the worst storms on record.

Winds at Cape Blanco — 30 miles west of Coos Bay — registered 140 miles per hour before they blew out the weather stations's wind gauge.

Gungha made her way into Coos Bay, over treacherous reefs, and under her own power with two U.S. coast guard cutters and a helicopter standing by.

On Monday Manning phoned John Damgaard, publisher of the Victorian for help.

On Tuesday Damgaard and his son, Mike arrived at Coos Bay, to find houses smashed by trees, mobile homes ripped apart and roads littered with the storm's aftermath.

The Gungha, with her replacement crew, is now on her way to Victoria and is expected to make the 460-mile trip in approximately one week.

Rub Aids More Than Muscles

EDMONTON (CP) — An accredited English masseur says a lot of people involved in body massage don't know what they are doing.

"Massage is an art," said Reg Farley, a masseur from the Northern Institute of Massage in England, which is accredited by the British secretary of state.

"It's not just a question of knowing where the muscles tionship."

Mr. Farley, a registered nurse who is teaching two are, it's a kind of rela- Swedish massage courses at Grant MacEwan Community College this fall, said massage has an important role to play in relieving tensions and problems.

"We know, for example, that about 80 per cent of the people who go to doctors have psychosomatic symptoms. They aren't really sick to begin with.

"But doctors don't have time to deal with this sort of thing— people become tense and frustrated and turn to the medicine cabinet for Valium, Librium, aspirin or whatever."

Massage treats the complete person, not just the physiological symptoms, Mr. Farley said.

"We don't yet really understand what it is—you use a little bit of psychology, sociology. It's a therapy, not just rubbing."

Mr. Farley said he is striving to give "an ethical basis" to massage.

"You'll always have the bodyrub parlors where you go and pay 50 bucks and all that. That's not what this course is about at all."

Students who complete both courses are eligible to write an accreditation exam from the Northern Institute. Swedish Massage I teaches background knowledge of the body necessary to perform various massage techniques, while Swedish Massage II provides practical experience with sexes segregated.

"This is not a Mickey Mouse course," Mr. Farley said. "It's not just a bit of body rubbing. There's some real work involved."

The Earl Didn't Invent the Sandwich

TINY BENNETT

When the Earl of Sandwich back in the 18th century refused to leave the gambling tables and demanded that his supper beef be brought to him between hunks of bread, he was following an age-old eating pattern.

In Europe right through the Middle Ages slabs of bread were put in front of those seated at the table, each sliced off meat and ate it from the "trencher" of bread and then ate the bread now rich with the meat juices; hence the word trenchman — trencherperson today of course.

However, while we credit an English nobleman with giving his name to the sandwich, similar food preparation had been in common use around the world for centuries before his time. And in many places I have visited I have enjoyed the same type of "sandwich" that has been in vogue there from Biblical times up to the present day.

In the Middle East, farmers still enjoy a sandwich that relates to Jacob's Mess of Pottage; a flat loaf of bread that splits open at a tug and is then filled with lentiles cooked with sliced onions and fresh-picked field produce.

I've wrapped a folded chapatti around curried goat meat, for a hurried snack-cum-meal, while serving with troops from what is now Pakistan and I have fished boiled lamb out of a boiling pot by trapping a morsel in a hunk of pita bread, in an Arab encampment deep in the heart of the North African desert.

Sandwiches all . . . AND delicious.

How I wish I could say the same of some of the sandwiches that I have been offered in North America.

We are great sandwich eaters. We take a sandwich, inseead of having lunch, we make them up at home for the kids to take to school and the workers to take to work. We take this form of food preparation for granted and all too often we come up with a dry, tasteless object that has almost no real nutritional food value.

Sandwich making is one of the great cooking arts that does not rely upon recipes nor the use of high priced fillings or exotic concoctions and hours of preparation.

What is called for is a sense of imagination, a little flair and very strict attention to the quality and the blending of materials.

But most of all, to the production of a sandwich that gives a great taste treat to the eater through offering an instant of the yummies.

Okay, so your kids like peanut butter and jelly sandwiches and insist on them every day. Nothing wrong with this. I adore a good peanut butter and jelly sandwich and it is a true test of prowess in the kitchen to make it right.

Kids go through taste phases, as I well know, because with a son and a daughter 16 years apart, I seem to have been making school lunches for two solid generations; and I have.

They move from peanut butter and jelly, to bologna, to ham, to spiced meats, to "A weight watchers." And one must swing with the changing trend in their taste factors to keep them happy with their box lunch. It really is not that difficult to prepare a wholesome and sensible packed lunch based upon a good and delicious sandwich.

A sandwich is only as good as the bread used, so go for 100 per cent wholewheat at least, and if practical and acceptable use the darkest of whole rye breads obtainable. Naturally, if you bake your own bread, of whatever type, you will know for sure such a sandwich will never be swapped.

The filler should always be at least as thick as the bread slices. This explains why the best commercial sandwich buy at a fair or exposition is always corned beef or pastami from a Jewish stand that piles thinly-sliced meat three-times the thickness of the rye slices that are not buttered because it is againt Kosher to mix dairy with meat.

One slice of meat in a sandwich, even if chickly coated with spread, makes for dull eating. However in making a bologna sandwich, using slice dbologna for household budget reasons, plump up the single slice with such extras as leaf lettuce, a thin slice of mild onion, thinly sliced pickles, chutney, relish or even some of each.

When making sandwiches from left-over meats, slice the meat razor thin to get several layers instead of a hunked slice. Even tough meat, cut ACROSS the grain, can thus become easy eating in a well-prepared sandwich.

Superb egg sandwiches can be made at a 10th the cost of meat fillings but this usually horrid sandwich calls for great care. Back in the hungry 30s my mother made them for me, by boiling eggs exactly nine minutes. Peeling them when chilled in cold water and then chopping them in a bowl with such cheap items as fresh picked tarragon, watercress, diced bacon bits or even flakes of fish from fish heads she'd got for free from our local fishmonger, "to feed the cat."

The still low cost egg can make a great sandwich — if you have imagination.

But then, so can a jar of peanut butter.

Carrot Pudding For Group Of Seven

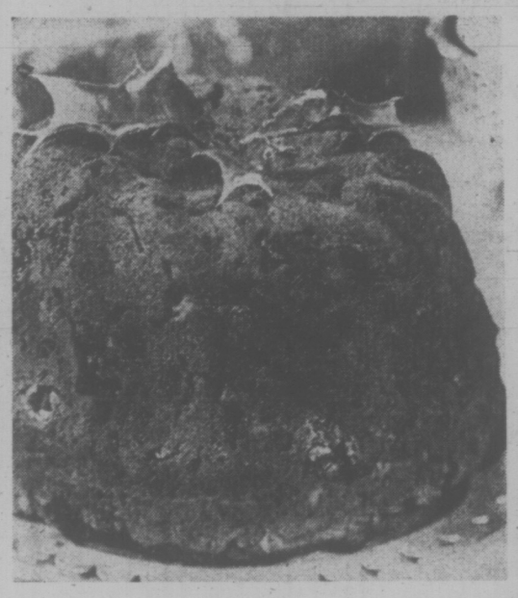
By MARY MOORE

Early in December of 1974 I made a steamed Carrot Pudding to take to a Christmas party for my "Group of Seven" Hi C young people on the Saturday night before Christmas. The plan was it was to age until needed later in the month. It did not have a chance. Guests came to my house and I served it.

So I had to make another for the "Group of Seven" party. (This column is being typed on December 16, 1974.)

This pudding has many virtues: it is not expensive; it must be made in advance to mature; the flavor is excellent; some of our old-fashioned readers will be pleased to see it calls for shredded carrots and potatoes and no eggs.

Below is a new easy lemon sauce to serve with it.



STEAMED CARROT PUDDING
(8 generous servings)

- 1½ cups shredded carrots (softly packed)
- 1 cup shredded scrubbed, unpared potatoes
- 1 cup sugar
- ½ cup shortening (room temperature)
- 1½ cups stirred but unsifted all-purpose flour
- ¾ tsp. salt
- 1½ tsp. baking soda
- ½ tsp. cinnamon
- ½ cup hot tap water
- 1¼ cups chopped dates
- 1 cup currants
- 1 cup whole blanched almonds

Measure all ingredients into a large bowl in order given and mix well.

Grease earthenware or pyrex bowl and line it with four 3" broad strips of doubled foil criss-crossed. (This is to facilitate turning out as this pudding wants to stick.) Note: You may prefer to use two 3-cup-size bowls.

Turn in pudding mixture, smooth top, cover with heavy foil and tie it down with string. Place trivet on bottom of steamer or large pot, add 1" boiling water, lower pudding into pot, cover and bring to boil. Turn heat down and simmer 2½ hours. This pudding should be made at least 1 week in advance of serving and reheated for 1 hour in the way it was first steamed.

Serve with:

LEMON MACE SAUCE

- 3 tbsp. corn starch
- 2-3 cup white sugar
- ½ tsp. salt
- 2 cups hot water
- ¼ cup lemon juice
- ½ tsp. mace (or nutmeg)
- 2 tbsp. butter

Mix together dry in saucepan the corn starch, sugar and salt. Stir in hot water and cook stirring until thick. Stir in lemon juice, mace and butter and reheat. Serve boiling hot in sauceboat.

Medlars; Quinces Come to Usable Stage

By HILDA BEASTALL

Today a few items of miscellaneous character just now coming to a useable stage in some Victoria gardens. All are known to be grown on this end of Vancouver Island.

The fruit of the Medlar tree (Mespilus germanica) is usually not ready to be gathered until early November.

They must be fully mature or they will shrivel instead of progressing to a stage known as "bletted". This word is perhaps only capable of being translated as "overripe" for it applies to certain fruits which commence ripening internally such as pears and medlars.

After being gathered, a medlar may take two weeks of this ripening at house temperature before it is at its best for eating.

The pulp will be soft, having it is at its best for eating a flavor like no other fruit. I have eaten several just by scooping out the soft pulp with a spoon. You like them more as you become accustomed to both texture and flavor.

It is said that medlars are made into jelly in southern England where the trees are found semi-wild in woodlands probably as a result of bird distributions of seeds.

Since we now have a young tree expected to be bearing fruits in three years or so, further suggestions on using the fruits will be welcomed.

The Quince is another seldom seen fruit, though I know of several Quince trees in existence locally.

The quince fruits are picked in early November as they begin to turn yellow and emit the distinct aroma which denotes ripening.

It is not a fruit to eat raw being extremely hard and rather dry in texture. However, when boiled with a little yellow sugar until the pieces are softened, the flavor is truly unique.

I made small jars of conserve with one large quince and some apples.

Quince-Apple Conserve

1 large quince (12 ounces)
3 medium size sweet apples juice of ½ lemon
one-third cup yellow sugar

Cut the washed, unpeeled fruit into small chunks, covering with cold water at once to prevent discoloration and loss of vitamins. Leave in cores and seeds.

Pour off all but about ¾ cup of water; sprinkle with lemon juice, cover with lid and bring quickly to boiling point.

Reduce heat; simmer gently, stirring often, until quince feels soft to fork testing. When all pieces are softened remove from heat.

Push fruit pulp through a sieve, using a wood spoon, pulp will be thick; try not to waste any on the skins.

Measure the pulp back into the saucepan; it should be about 2 cups. Reheat to boiling; add sugar slowly so as not to reduce simmering. Simmer until well thickened, about 30 minutes, stirring as necessary to prevent scorching.

Pour into small sterilized jars; put lids on. Or, cover tops of conserve with melted wax.

This conserve goes well with meats, beanburgers, many types of pancakes, as well as on muffins.

Flavoring, such as ¼ teaspoon of powdered ginger will change the character of the conserve; one small orange—sections cubed and thin outer skin small diced—makes a marlalade conserve.

A few pieces of chopped, crystallized ginger makes this into a delectable filling for small tartlets such as Maids of Honor tarts recently described in this column.

The smaller fruits called quince in Victoria are grown on the bushy Japanese flowering quince, Chaenomeles lagenaria. This is a shrub having spiny branches, bearing usually orange-scarlet waxy flowers in spring as the leaves expand, followed by hard fruits.

Two to three-inch diameter and length is their size and as with other quince fruits the green turns yellow as they ripen. This is the time to pick so as to prevent damaging fruits by falling.

As the fruits are kept for a week or so in the house the aroma begins to develop. They are then ready to use.

Making a clear quince jelly uses far more sugar than we believe necessary or wanted today although pectin in quinces is high. A thick conserve, less sweet, pressed through a sieve is far more economical in all ways.

Use these small quince fruits as in the Quince-Apple Conserve recipe above. Put into small glass jars it makes tasty additions to winter meals or as small homemade gifts to friends.

Another special treat of early November are the pumpkin seeds. When cooking chunks of pumpkin to make bread, tarts or pies, or to freeze for winter, scrape out the seeds to dry in the oven.

Spread the pumpkin seeds, freed of stringy material on a cookie sheet or in a shallow glass dish.

Bake in a slow oven at 135 degs. C. for about 45 minutes or until dried and somewhat crisp. Stir and shake the pan at intervals.

You should taste a few of the seeds fresh before roasting; then again after this gentle drying.

The seeds of the naked-seeded pumpkin grown by several Victorians for the first time this year, need no hulling—they lack the hard outer shell or hull, thus their name.

Somewhat people like a few grains of salt sprinkled over the seeds while still warm, but this adds nothing beneficial to the flavor.

The taste without salt is delicious. The seeds are used in homemade breakfast muesli or granola; ground or whole in cookies; grated on salads in yogurt dressing or wherever you want their delightful flavor.

The raw unroasted seeds need to be well dried at room warmth for some hours before storing in glass jars. Keep them in refrigerator, for they are a rich, nourishing food which will spoil in warmth or dampness.

'Real Thing' Disgusted Children

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

By DR. JEAN MAYER

Recently, a dietitian told me about a "nutrition" class she just started with a group of 4-and-5-year-old nursery schoolers. She brought oranges to school so that they could squeeze them for their morning snack. For many of the youngsters, she soon realized, it was the first time they learned that orange juice comes from those round, "orange-colored" fruits, and not from a cardboard container or a can.

Some of the children were disgusted with the "real thing." They actually found it inferior not only to diluted frozen orange juice, which the dietitian wouldn't have minded, but also inferior to the sugared orange drinks — which she, and I, certainly do mind.

The school room incident reminded me that another young mother recently told me of her children's delighted surprise, on visiting a farm, to learn that milk comes from a live, gentle cow, not from cartons in the supermarket dairy case. "It has changed their whole view of food," she told me. "Now, my kids want to know where everything comes from."

Each Saturday, as my wife and I shop the local supermarket, I am pleased to see young couples and their children selecting food together. But these two conversations have set me to wondering. Just how good a job are we doing in giving our children the basic facts about their food supply?

One of these days, some manufacturer will no doubt go nondairy creamers one better and introduce with fanfare a nondairy, pure-additive "milk." As adult consumers, will our children be able to distinguish between that and the real thing any better than today's schoolers can differentiate between orange juice and orange drinks?

If I had still had small children, I would do two things to be certain that they know the difference between real and artificial foods and what that means to good health.

First, I would try to prepare them to be wise consumers; I'd make a conscious effort to give them a first hand acquaintance with their dairy foods. That entails not just taking them to the supermarket, as so many intelligent young parents already do, but to local specialty food stores. Go to a fish market where they can see for themselves the difference between frozen fillets in a package and whole, fresh-caught fish. Or take them to a local cheese shop offering the world's cheeses, some of which are in huge wheels, and a free slice to taste.

Shop once in a while at an Italian or Chinese or Spanish market and at your best neighborhood bakery. Make a regular summer expedition to nearby farms for fresh fruits and vegetables, and let the children choose them. You could give your youngsters some finacnal guidance at the same time. Arrange for them to meet first hand the farm's animals (including the cows) and buy some fresh eggs.

Back at home, make a point of encouraging the children to plan menus around their purchases and let them help cook them. Freeze homemade ice cream and let them lick the dasher. Whip the cream into butter and let them taste fresh buttermilk. In fact, try it yourself. It's delicious.

Make a habit of having them in the kitchen when you cook, so they can see how fresh foods are combined into soups, stews and casseroles. If you bake, give them a chance to help mix bread and biscuit dough and to roll pie crust. Let them experiment with food and flavor combinations. Getting to know the real thing is their best insurance against the blandishments of erasatz foods.

I wouldn't stop there. Few city-or suburban-bred adults, let alone children, have an understanding of the orgins of our food supply. Make it a family outing to go to see wheat, rice and corn growing and being harvested. Also, see if there is an old-fashioned grist mill in your area, or even a large modern milling operation. Go to the canning factory.

Reason to Nag

DEAR ABBY: My mother used to nag my father all the time, so I made up my mind that no matter what the circumstances, I would never nag my husband.

Well, Ted and I have been married for seven months, and if ever a wife had reasons to nag her husband, I had plenty, but I kept my mouth shut.

The biggest problem is that Ted doesn't come right home after work. And he never calls to tell me he'll be late.

Even when he comes home at 4:00 in the morning with liquor on his breath, I greet him with a smile and a sexy nightie and say, "Hi, Darling, can I fix you something to eat?"

Last Friday, he went to work and I didn't see him again until Monday evening. I was worried sick, but when he showed up, all I said was, "Gee, hon, I sure missed you."

I'm afraid he's got another girl. I can't understand him. He was so crazy aboue me when we first met, he made me break my engagement to another guy to marry him.

What am I doing wrong?

Needs Advice

DEAR NEEDS: You are letting Ted get away with murder. I don't recommend nagging a man, but I do think you should cut out the phony sweet talk and substitute some PLAIN talk. Your marriage is headed for the rocks. Get some counseling!

DEAR ABBY: I am the 49-year-old mother of an 18-year-old daughter.

We are both quite a bit overweight, and I would like to tell you how we accidentally discovered how to lose a lot of weight.

We were watching a wrestling match on TV, and much to my surprise, my daughter suggested that we wrestle with each other! At first I couldn't see it, but I finally consented.

We laid an old mattress down in the basement, put on our bathing suits and squared off like we had seen professional wrestlers do. My daughter found an opening and rushed me. Next thing I knew, we were down on the mattress rolling over and over.

The first time we wrestled, we were exhausted in 10 minutes. The next time, we rested a little longer. Now, we can wrestle for half an hour.

We both cut out bread, butter, potatoes and desserts, and between that and the wrestling matches nearly every day, we have trimmed down a lot. Everybody has noticed it.

Suggest this to other women. It's a great way to work off excessive pounds.

Trim Mom

DEAR MOM: And it's a good way to work off one's hostilities, too!

JELLY SANDWICH COOKIES

(makes 20-22 double 2½" cookies)

1 c. soft shortening (½ c. butter and ½ c. shortening are recommended)
½ c. icing suger
2 tsp. vanilla
2½ c. \ sifted all-purpose flour
¼ tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
2 tbsp. milk (level)

Cream together the shortening and icing sugar until light. Add vanilla. Sift together the four, baking powder and salt. Add to the creamed mixture and stir in with the milk. Press into a ball, place on large piece of wax paper, flatten with palm, wrap up and chill. (I put my dough in the freezer for 20 minutes.) Break off half of dough. (Keep remainder cold.) Pat out on lightly floured board. Turn dough over to lightly flour other side. Roll out to ⅛" thickness, patting and coaxing edge to make it even as you would shortbread. (This is a lovely plastic dough that handles easily, but do not dawdle or it will warm up and be difficult to lift.) Cut out half of dough with 2½" cookie cutter. (Top of a clean 10-oz. soup can is exactly right size.) Transfer to ungreased cookie sheet, placing them 1" apart. Bake at 350 deg. Fahr. for 8 minutes (no more!). Roll out remaining chilled dough as about BUT cut them out with 2½" doughnut cutter and bake as above OR if you do not have a doughnut cutter, cut out with 2½" cutter and make holes in centre by cutting them out with a cutter about 1" in diameter like a cap from a soft drink bottle. (Press all the cut-out holes together and roll and cut and bake them too.) Bake as above. Be sure not to burn any of these thin crisp cookies. Cool on racks. On solid cookies put a mound of 1 teaspoon strawberry (or raspberry or red black currant) jelly, spreading it a LITTLE to two sides to make cookies stick together. Put cookies rings on top. Now take a big bite!

NOTES: 1) If you want to decorate these toothsome morsels, before baking moisten the tops of the rings by dipping your fingertips in milk and neatly brushing surface with it. Then sparingly apply shaved Brazils or filberts or almonds. Milk will hold nuts on. Then bake as above. When the jelly sanwiches are made up with these nutty top rings they look like French pastries. 2) This cookie dough could be cut out smaller (no rings) and used for sandwich cookies put together with icing such as lemon or chocolate or any icing you fancy.

Barley and Cabbage Soup

Serves 6)

2 tbsp. pot balrey
2 c. meat broth (preferably chicken or beef)
2 tbsp. butter (or ham fat) (first amount)
½ medium-small onion, chopped
1 c. finely chopped green cabbage
2 tbsp. butter or margarine (second amount)
2 tbsp. flour
2 c. milk
2 chicken bouillon cubes
½ tsp celery salt (optional)
5 slices side bacon, chopped (or ½ c. finely chopped cooked ham)

Soak barley in broth one hour. SIMMER, covered, for 2 hours. Saute the chopped onion and cabbage in the first amount of butter (or ham fat) but DO NOT BROWN. Melt second amount of butter, stir in the flour and bouillon cubes and celery salt (if used) to blend, then stir in milk until thick. Add to barley and broth; stir in sauteed cabbage and onion. Taste it. You may need to add salt. Chop and fry the bacon until dry and crisp but NOT brown. Drain on paper towelling.

Serve the soup in preheated bowls sprinkled with crumbled bacon or ham.

Over-simplified this is an economical barley and cabbage soup but it is a chef's triumph

OYSTER STEW

DUBLIN (Reuter) — Burning boats and drifting trawlers have signalled the outbreak of confrontations in a remote part of western Ireland over the country's richest natural oyster beds.

Angry fishermen in Fenit and Kilfenora — the tiny villages nearest the beds — have turned on competitors from neighboring villages who they think are trying to poach part of what may be a record oyster harvest.

They have burned 15 small boats and set seven trawlers adrift in the Atlantic to discourage fishermen from other coastal towns. The Irish air force has been called in to look for five trawlers still missing.

Green Thumbs Carry On

Chill days, pale sun and winds whistling around the cornices are no deterrent to Green Thumbs, the year-round balcony gardeners.

While many Victorians have hung up their garden tools for a few weeks at least, apartment dwellers with less space but lots of zeal can carry their balcony garden hobby well into winter and have a head start on spring.

Green Thumb Club, which started primarily as a hobby group of James Bay apartment residents, has pooled its balcony culture experience and come up with a 24-page booklet, The Balcony Garden, which is in demand throughout the city.

Gardening in the sky poses its special problems, but it has compensations such as more light and air than conventional gardens may get.

The handbook is not a text, but a collection of brief hints, suggestions and individual experiences set off by black and white sketches and poems by 15 club members guided by chairman Kay Ransom. It is not without humor.

Gladys Morton begins her contribution on Planting the Northern Balcony with the advice she got from a horticulturist in response to her query of what to grow on a sunless deck:

"A flagpole."

Or Ruth Judson's Balcony Blues:

My garden is a thing of beauty.
It blooms beyond the call of duty . . .
But always at its best of all
Before, or after, my friends call.

The present mayor and council; (and this includes Alderman Mike Young) have allowed Centennial Square, and the activities on the lawn at City Hall to deteriorate to a shameful state; and have done nothing about it. Don't they even know how to draw up a by-law "Keep Off The Grass"?!! The mayor has plenty of sarcasm and criticism for many things and people, one would have thought with such an abundance and wealth of knowledge he would at least know how to cope with this situation. The front of our City Hall is a disgrace, filthy with pigeon manure. The mayor and council go in and out of this building every day yet do nothing about it. What a shame. Our City Hall should be a show piece to the tourists and to our own people. Looking at the manure you would think you were in Asia or in a small town in Mexico. Candidate Young seems very careless even in such small matters as this!

Watercolors on Display

A collection of Herbert Siebner's watercolors will form the basis of a new exhibition which will circulate Vancouver Island and mainland centres this winter.

The program is made available by Greater Victoria Art Gallery's extension service.

These watercolors are a sort of journal — an almost continuous visual record of the artist's travels throughout Europe in 1962 on a Canada Council senior grant.

The sketches of cities, monuments and landscapes will be accompanied by a number of larger Siebner paintings from the gallery's permanent collection. Also a slide program is to be arranged incorporating the artist's own views and thoughts written down while actually executing the watercolor sketches.

German-born, Siebner came to Canada in 1954 with his wife and has made Victoria his home.

He has a long list of one man and group shows, exhibitions, awards and teaching posts to his credit and his works are found in collections in Berlin, Toronto, Calgary and many other public and private collections.

Copenhagen Police Fighting Brothel Boom

By BERNARD NOSSITER

COPENHAGEN (WP) — Police in permissive Denmark have launched a drive against vice, cracking down on brothels lightly masked as massage parlors that have mushroomed all over town here.

In the past two weeks, police have arrested three operators—including a woman—suspected of running houses of prostitution. Two of three, however, have already reopened for business, one measure of a vice cop's unhappy lot in relaxed Denmark.

Every afternoon, the tabloid Exstra Bladet runs a page or more of classified and small display ads openly hawking the girls, their specialties and their telephones.

"Are you a romantic or a realist" asks one. "Three experienced girls will fulfill your every wish."

"Solveig presents three new girls," says another. "Susanna, Bettina and Eva. They still give a German massage for serious clients. Sauna and bath. Open Monday to Friday 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.; Saturday 10-4."

Prostitution is legal here and solo girls can work the bars and streets unmolested. But living off the earnings of a prostitute is a criminal offense. So about a year ago, deputy police commissioner Aksel Frederinsen, a round, worried grey-haired man in his fifties, put his Department of Detectives to work on the massage parlor operators.

In the gloomy and cavernous Copenhagen police headquarters, Fredericksen explained the other day:

"It's not the girls we're interested in but the man behind, with the money."

The trade is so lucrative, he says, that storefronts normally selling for $3,500 have changed hands at 10 times the price.

"Very often it is a gang of two or three," the commissioner said, "running a chain of five or 10 places and maybe involved in other crimes."

In the Vesterbro District of Copenhagen, Frederinsen said, the police are convinced that some brothel bosses are dealing in narcotics and keeping their girls liberally supplied with drugs.

The commissioner is troubled about how much support his drive will get. He hints that he is reluctant to make more arrests until he sees whether the three he has nabbed are convicted and jailed.

In any case, he fights an uphill battle. He estimates there are more than 100 brothels in Copenhagen alone and he has fewer than 10 detectives -- all of them busy with murder, rape and other criminal cases—to hunt down the money men.

Detective Hans Neilsen, a blond and mustachioed Viking, is a veteran of the brothels battle. He says that the parlors operate with two to eight girls who charge customers 100 to 500 krone—$17 to $85—for their services.

The operator typically collects $34 to $42 a day from each girl, regardless of what she takes in. Some owners try to collect 30 per cent to 50 per cent of each girl's daily gross, but that involves an elaborate game of recording the number of customers served. Detective Neilsen says that one girl may handle 10 clients daily.

In sum, this is small but lush business with only a modest cash outlay required for store fronts. A man with five parlors of three girls each can gross $3,000 a week.

The houses proclaim a remarkable variety of service, all keyed to nationality. Exstra Bladet's ads offer a Danish massage, French, German, Swedish, Spanish, Greek and virgin, among others.

The "Stardust Massage" simply calls itself, "The town's most advanced spanning celler."

Would Commissioner Frederiksen ask Exstra Bladet to refuse such ads to help his campaign?

He was amazed at the suggestion. "It's a liberating world we live in," he explained. "It's a very bad thing to look into newspapers."

I AM MORE INTERESTED IN OLD PEOPLE THAN I AM IN OLD BUILDINGS!!

MR. HOLLICK—candidate for mayor, is trying to bribe you older people to vote for him, saying he will give you free bus passes. He should know better than this as this is not in his power to do. Buses are under provincial government control. Even if he could, this might save some of you $1.00 (one dollar per month), but in stating that he could build three parkades for 2,000 cars, and a convention centre (with your large tax dollar increase in taxes), as these structures would cost millions — $1,000,000s — of dollars, he would be taking 10 times that amount away from you. How foolish. The convention centre (If it is so necessary for certain businessmen) should be built by them; not by you the already overburdened taxpayer! If it is such a big moneymaker, why have not some private people built it long ago?

Mr. M. Young, candidate for mayor says "development of a downtown residential core." I say this must not be done, as this is the most expensive property to buy; thus necessitating more and larger taxes from you. Also it would congest traffic more. There is better and less expensive property to deal with, in decent residential surroundings.

He also says "continued acquisition of lands and parks" I say no; this would also mean increase in taxes. We have probably more parks, on a per capita basis, than any city in North America. Do you see hundreds of young people using our beautiful beaches even? The answer is no. They don't even use what we have, as they ought. (Strange how these men say "spend, spend" so quickly. Why not?, it's other peoples money!!)

Logged Areas Dismay Team

A well-known wildlife television team said Friday a plan to make a wildlife film based on Vancouver Island had to be revised because of the eyesore caused by logging on the island.

John and Janet Foster, creators of the popular CBC television series To the Wild Country", said they flew over the interior of the island and were so surprised at the miles of denuded landscape that they changed their film-making plans.

Janet said they were dismayed at the logging practice of clear-cutting and stripping entire shorelines of lakes and creeks of trees, as well as seeing roads built right around the rim of lakes.

"So we felt we would be dishonest if we portrayed the island as having a wonderful wilderness resource," she said.

The couple decided instead to make a film on the island's west coast which Janet says has still some mature stands of timber, natural creeks and unspoiled beaches.

The film entitled Wild Pacific Shore was seen by thousands of television viewers last year.

The man-and-wife team are in Victoria to autograph their new book To the Wild Country featuring some of their best photographs taken on their adventure film making trips to promote wilderness areas in Canada.

Foster, a graduate of the Ontario Agricultur College at Guelph, joined CBC Television in 1962. He has acted as writer and host on many national network programs, such as Country Calendar, This Land of Ours, Vacation Canada and A Way Out.

Janet, a native of Ottawa, started her career as a dancer with the National Ballet of Canada. She later joined the television production staff of the CTV network.

Last year Janet completed her doctoral thesis on the history of wildlife conservation in Canada for York University.

John is impressed with the "rich and timeless beauty" of the island's west coast, but said logging activities cutting into the last remaining watersheds may soon change this.

"You sould preserve the west coast shoreline," he said. It's your heritage .It's a precious resource."

"I was surprised to hear there is only one natural watershed left on the east coast of the island," he added.

He said that wilderness is a rapidly dwindling resource in Canada and once it is gone, it is gone forever.

People say that trees will grow again," he added. "Yes, but the trees will never be the same, nor the creeks and some life-forms disappear for ever when a natural forest goes."

The couple said the national parks have done a good job of preserving original bits of Canada.

CHILDREN INVITED TO SEE PLAY

Adults are asked to bring a child to performances of The Ice Wolf, a play for young people being staged at St. George's Church hall, 2580 Maynard, this week.

The play is a presentation of University of Victoria theatre department. It is a student production of a Canadian script by Joanna Kraus, directed by Dale Genge.

The production began a series of performances Tuesday and will continue through Saturday starting at 2 p.m.

Arrangements have been made for school groups to attend.

An award-winning play, it is directed toward children in the nine to 13 age group. The story is based on the struggle of an albino child, Anatou, born into a small isolated Eskimo village where her arrival is regarded as a bad omen.

Tickets are available for the performance on Saturday at 25 cents. Further information can be obtained at the Phoenix box office, 477-4821.

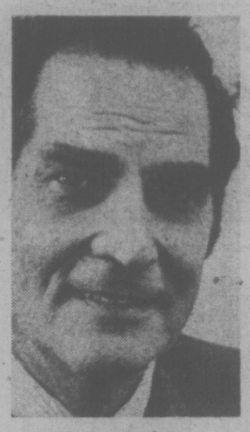
Three Newcomers Among Six in Esquimalt Vote Race



Bissada

Jongejan

Wright

Peden

Lundgren

Hill

Three newcomers to municipal politics are challenging the three incumbents seeking re-election in Saturday's Esquimalt election.

Squared off against incumbents Ken Hill, Conrad Lundgren and Robert Peden are bank manager Ken Wright, stockbroker Dick Jongejan and restaurateur Chafik Bassada.

Wright, who has lived and worked in Esquimalt for two years, wants residents to have more say in council decisions.

"Input from residents now is normally of a negative nature in the form of protest groups," Wright said, "and council reacts only after such a group is formed and gives the group representation in the form of a petition."

He cited the "garbage hassle" as one example.

At the Oct. 27 council meeting, he said, three aldermen recommended to council continuing the two-week garbage collection until May 31, 1976. Council rejected the recommendation and reinstated weekly collection — after receiving a 300-name petition to stop two-week collection.

"Surely we don't need a municipal election and a petition of residents for council to make a decision.

"Are the residents of Esquimalt aware that council has committed about $22,800 to an architectual firm regarding the proposed public safety building?" Wright asked. "Are they aware the same building will cost $500,000-$75,000? What will this building provide for us?

"This is just one example of the failure of council to keep us informed and making commitments without the input of residents on relevant issues," he said.

He suggests a information bulletin to residents to keep them informed on issues being discussed at council.

Jongejan says the biggest aldermanic election issue is sound fiscal responsible management.

He said budget limits should be set by council before departmental estimates are submitted. This would allow council to impose spending limits rather than municipal department heads, avoiding the traditional budget juggling.

"Taxpayers have limited funds and get only a nominal salary and wage increases," Jongepan said. "Something municipal council must learn to take into consideration."

He said most of Esquimalt's problems are in financial management and council must stick to wage and price guidelines as much as the ordinary taxpayer.

Bissada says the joint fire and police departments must be separated.

"The police may even need a few extra members to fight the rising crime rate," Bissada said.

He feels the community's priorities have to be rearranged financially to give Esquimalt the best deal with the available money.

"We have to live within our tax limitations without breaking the taxpayer," he said.

Hill is seeking his fourth term as alderman.

"I stand on my and council's record of accomplishments," he said.

A senior alderman and acting mayor, Hill is co-ordinating a design committee for a new public safety building but warns that he "will not advocate construction until federal or provincial grants or low interest money is available."

He agrees with the new density adjustment study which will limit Esquimalt growth to 18,500 people by 1996.

"The plan will cut down on apartment construction and introduces a new style of family living with townhouses," he said.

Hill said he will try again to establish a bi-monthly newsletter to inform Esquimalt residents of the many items of council business not normally brought to their attention.

"I recognize the decreasing ability of municipalities to pay for all necessary services," he said, "and I pledge that if elected, I will work with senior levels of government to search for methods to ease the municipal taxpayer's burden."

Lundgren thinks apartment zoning is the big issue and says that as chairman of the planning, zoning and housing committee he has directed the advisory planning commission bylaw through council.

"I called for and recommended substantial down-zoning in our multi-dwelling (four-storey box) areas as the first step to our community plan," he said.

Lundgren said the primary responsibility is to maintain and improve Esquimalt's quality of life.

He also supports a new fire-police building and control of the houseboats in West Bay.

Peden is campaigning for improved neighborhood planning, better recreational facilities and survey of community services.

"I would like to see more people involved in the orderly development and planning of their community and ultimately would like to develop a total plan for the municipality," he said.

Scare Tactics Backfire

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Veteran smokers shown gory pictures of blackened lungs and other scare tactics are more likely puff harder than quit, says a University of Michigan psychiatrist.

Gardner Quarton says this is because most started smoking in adolescence to hide their social fears and such sensational evidence of smoking's effects revives daring feelings they learned from their adolescent peers.

Years after adolescence, smokers respond to scare tactics with the same "I'm a man" or "I'm tough and you can't scare me with that" reaction they had as adolescents, Quarton told a conference of writers Tuesday.

By imitating "cool" and self-assured friends, many adolescent smokers disguise their social awkwardness and uncertainty behind the bravado of smoking, he said.

That early reward keeps them smoking, he said, even though the actual pleasure declines and the emotional and physical pain of breaking the trap and kicking the habit increases with time.

The pictures of smoke-stained lungs also will force smokers deeper into the "social trap" they're in, Quarton said.

He said that trap is one that all types of people, faced with all sorts of situations, get themselves into.

He called it "an irrational way people behave when they're confronted with data that should convince them to behave differently."

Fine of $50 For Striking

The first of 49 Victoria area federal employees on trial for unlawful participation in a strike Dec. 19, 1974, was found guilty in provincial court Monday.

Ministry of Transport coxswain Samuel Lowry was fined $50 when Judge Harold Alder decided there was "a concerted effort which amounted to a strike, and Lowry participated."

He was charged after failing to show up for work at the 203 Harbor Rd., and failing to provide the medical certificate Judge Alder ruled was needed.

The certificate would not have been needed if the new contract had been in effect. It was signed March 28, 1975, and retroactive in some areas.

Lowry was one of 32 employees at the yard who allegedly participated.

Defence counsel was criticized later by Judge William Ostler when lawyer Ron Tucker asked for adjournment of two similar cases to await an appeal of the Lowry case.

Lawyers had earlier been asked if they wanted one trial set as a test case to avoid rescheduling, said Ostler.

He said they had refused, and now inconvenienced the court whose "list is now cluttered with these cases."

Ostler adjourned the cases of John Adams and B. Burrows, also MOT employees at Harbor Road, to March 4 to fix another trial date.

"It would have been a sensible thing to do to take a test case. But there's no point in proceeding," said the judge.

Tucker said outside court the appeal will be a stated case, which means they will challenge points of law rather than fact.

Also acting for the defence is Alan Patterson.

Crown lawyers are Mike O'Connor and Malcolm McMicken.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

a 39-year-old Duncan man with two previous convictions was sentenced in provincial court Monday to three months in jail for impaired driving in Saanich on July 19.

Allan Edward Williams was also fined $150 for refusing the breath test and $100 for failing to remain at an accident scene.

He was found guilty of all three charges Oct. 20.

Judge William Ostler also suspended William's drivers' licence.

Jail sentence was passed despite lawyer Doug Christie's plea that: "The best course of rehabilitation is continued roots in the community."

He asked the accused be kept out of jail so he could continue his job.

Ostler said he had considered sending Williams to Alouette River for alcoholism rehabilitation, but had decided against it because Williams didn't want to go.

"He can be there in body, but if he's not there in mind, it's a waste of time and money all round," said the judge.

Wendel Gordon Karsgaard, 24, no fixed address, will spend one month in jail for possession of stolen property after three other charges were withdrawn.

He was found guilty following an incident Sept. 5 when police found stolen licence plates in his car.

He was also put on a year's probation and told to get psychiatric assistance "which I think is really what he needs," said Judge Ostler.

Two Victoria men were remanded to Nov. 25 for presentence report on a number of charges following incidents last month.

Thor Olaf Green, 36, no fixed address, changed his plea to guilty for possession of stolen property and three charges of impaired driving.

John Reid Wood, 32, no fixed address, changed his plea to guilty for theft of a bicycle in early October.

Court was told Green has a long record including three impaired driving convictions.

He was arrested near Colwood Oct. 31 with stolen goods in his car.

He was also picked up by police for impaired driving Oct. 21 and 26.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said Wood also has a lengthy record including theft and driving convictions.

The victim of a shooting early this year was fined $50 for failure to comply with a court order.

Phillip Brennan, 29, was to be a prosecution witness at the preliminary hearing in August of an ttempted murder charge against James Ronald Page.

He had been summonsed to appear but didn't show and a warrant was issued for his arrest. He was picked up soon after and testified at the hearing.

At the conclusion of the hearing Brennan was released on a court order to remain in Victoria county until Page's trial in December, or report weekly by letter to a probation official if he didn't.

On Monday, Brennan pleaded guilty to violating the order, saying he had gone to Ontario and forgot to write because of family problems.

In addition to the fine, Brennan was placed on three months probation and told to stay in Victoria or Vancouver counties until the Page trial is completed.

The shooting incident occurred at 1190 May Street.

In traffic court, Earle Vincent Darling, 55, of 1140 Woodstock, pleaded guilty to impaired driving and was fined $350, put on three months' probation and told to take the impaired drivers' course. He is prohibited from driving for a month.

Stanley Percival Gibson, 67, of 2930 Oldcorn Pl., pleaded guilty to the same charge and was fined $250 and given a three-month driving ban.

Edward Ralph Jury, 28, of 717 Admirals, was fined $350 for driving with over .08 blood alcohol, put on three months' probation and ordered to take the impaired drivers' course.

Puran Singh Sihota, 34, of 2821 Prior, was fined $300 for dangerous driving and prohibited from driving for three months.

Randy Dale Christopherson, 20, of 1249 Burnside, was fined $250 for failing to remain at an accident.

Charles K. Cummings, 60, of 2128 Foul Bay, was fined $200 for failing to remain at an accident.

DISHES FIT FOR QUEEN

LONDON (Reuter) — A chef employed on Queen Elizabeth's royal train was cleared Tuesday of stealing crockery and using it in his private catering trade. Police said they found three van loads of railway catering equipment worth $5,000 at the home of the chef, Granville Roper, 56. But, Judge Alistair Lonsdale ruled that he was not guilty of stealing as "it is not a criminal offence to borrowy your employer's property — even the royal crockery — to use at a private function."

Sight By Beep, Whoosh

OTTAWA (CP) — A bush is a whoosh and a wall is a beep to a blind person whose ears become eyes if he or she wears sonic sensory glasses, soon to be introduced into the Canadian market.

"An eight-month-old blind baby who has been using them for six months can pick out his favorite toy with no problem at all, knows when his mother walks in the room and can tell if she has a cookie in her hand," says Sue Leonard. Mrs. Leonard is an orientation and mobility specialist for the Canadian National Institute for the Blind (CNIB), whose Toronto branch hopes to include the glasses in a training program before the end of the year.

The glasses, which cost $1,850 a pair, are thicker than ordinary glasses and contain a sound transmitter and two receivers in the bridge above the nose. Two plastic tubes built into the arms of the glasses carry sound from the receiver to the wearer's ear, where they are plugged in "The little transmitter sends out high-frequency sound waves, beyond normal hearing. The sound hits an object, echoes back into the transducer and travels through the tubes into the person's ear," Mrs. Leonard explained.

"The mechanism was put into glasses for cosmetic reasons, so that the blind person will be unobtrusive," she added.

The sound depends on the texture and size of the object and the distance from the object.

"A bush will sound like a whoosh because each leaf will be echoeing a tiny sound, so a tonal pattern is created," Mrs. Leonard said. "A wall or window pane creates a solid beeping sound which gets louder as the person gets closer."

The range of detection may exceed 20 feet for large surfaces.

Mrs. Leonard emphasized that the glasses cannot be used alone as a guide for the blind person.

They cannot detect step-downs, such as curbs or stairs, and no sound can be received from low objects unless the person is looking down

"They have to be used with guide dog or long canes," Mrs. Leonard said.

She said it is not likely that many will invest in the glasses because they are so costly, but the CNIB will try to arrange a subsidy program.

The glasses, invented in New Zealand, have been used for experimentation in Australia, the United States and England since 1970.

The CNIB training program will also include a new guide cane, the C-5 laser cane, which sends out and receives pencil-thin laser beams and beeps according to the person's distance from an object.

A third device to help the blind is a pathsounder, a sound box worn around the neck, that beeps when objects are within six feet and buzzes when they're within three feet.

Neglected Adults Law

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Newfoundland is the only province in Canada with legislation enabling the former social services department to deal specifically with neglected adults, says Roy Tiller, a department director who administers the program.

"Not many cases" have come to his attention so far, but this is probably because the Neglected Adults Welfare Act is relatively new.

According to the act, proclaimed two years ago, any adult person may be declared neglected if he or she is judged incapable of caring for his or her home or person, or is neglected by others.

The provincial public service was restructured two years ago and it included the merger of complementary services to meet rehabilitation and recreational needs in one ministry.

The new department of recreation and rehabilitation included the former social services branch and was thus made responsible for the care of neglected, dependent and socially-deprived residents including handicapped children.

Prior to the restructuring, the department "did not have the facilities for placing elderly people in homes," Mr. Tiller said, so care of these individuals was worked out through inter-departmental co-operation.

The new department and its legislation now protects adults from abuse and once a man or woman has been declared neglected by the courts, he or she is then under the jurisdiction of the department.

Income Tax Rules 'A Mess . . .'

Victoria Times
WEDNESDAY, NOV. 12, 1975 45
FOURTH SECTION

QUEBEC (CP) — Changes have made Canada's tax sytem so complicated that even professional tax experts can barely follow it, the president of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants said Tuesday.

"How do you expect the ordinary taxpayer to understand this mess?" he asked delegates to the annual conference of the Canadian Tax Foundation.

He urged the federal government to declare a two-year moratorium on tax changes and to concentrate on simplifying the system. He also called for a revision of the income tax rate schedule to ease the burden on lower and middle income groups.

He said governments have modified the tax system time and time again, "thus adding to the complications which already exist and, at the same time, unconciously creating loopholes."

Many of these tax changes failed to produce the intended results, he said, citing the Registered Home Ownership Plan as one example.

"It was designed to help young couples save in order to eventually buy a house. It has degenerated into a loophole where spouses mutually transfer their property . . . to take advantage of the deduction."

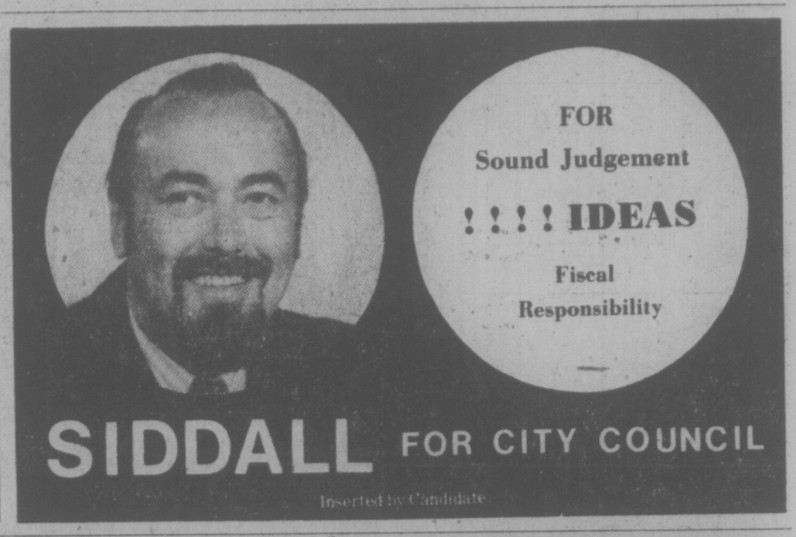
A straight-forward reduction in tax rates would have been simpler and much more effective, he said.

As a result of the numerous modificatins, he said the federal guide to filling out income tax forms now has 45 pages of small print, the Quebec guide 41 pages and Ontario guide 12 pages.

The present income tax rate schedule discourages effort and savings, he said.

It has too many brackets, the rates go up too quickly, especially in lower brackets, and reach too high a level.

"The federal income tax schedule has thirteen levels, more than half of which apply to taxable incomes of less than $10,000. This means that the lower or middle income taxpayer who finds his income increasing because of inflation . . . can easily jump one or even two brackets at a time, thus incurring a proportionately heavier tax burden."



Ford Backs Cash Role For Canada

Times Washington Bureau
By PAUL WHITELAW

WASHINGTON — Although it is now virtually certain Canada will not be invited to a summit of major industrial countries in France this weekend, President Ford will press at the talks for Canada's membership in a super-group of finance ministers he wants to set up.

U.S. state department officials said Tuesday it is hoped Canada will be included in the ministerial group the president will propose to follow up on action taken at the summit.

Only six countries — France, Britain, West Germany, Italy, Japan and the United States — are scheduled to take part in the head of government talks.

France continues to stubbornly oppose extension of an invitation to Prime Minister Trudeau, the officials said.

U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger, in a speech Tuesday at Pittsburgh announced that Ford will propose that ministers "responsible for economic policy meet periodically to follow up on policy directions set at the summit and to review what further decisions may be needed."

Kissinger said U.S. representative in such a group would be Treasury Secretary William Simon.

Briefing reporters in advance of the secretary's speech, department officials said the U.S. had not given up hope that Trudeau might be asked to attend the summit Nov. 15-17.

However, the restrained tone of the comments reflected the view held privately by officials here that it is now too late for Canada.

According to diplomatic sources, French President Giscard d'Estaing fears that Canada's presence at Rambouillet would strengthen unduly the pisition of the United States.

State department officials stressed Tuesday that the economic summit will not reach settlements on outstanding economic issues, but merely attempt to achieve a broad concensus on the need for cooperative action.

New Quota CP Air Benefit

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Otto Lang has opened the door to future changes in the way the air passenger market is shared between Air Canada and CP Air — a step that might benefit the privately-owned airline.

Lang said in Montreal that he may review the system giving CP Air and Air Canada a definite percentage share of the domestic trans-continental business.

Current policy assures the government-owned airline a dominant position both domestically and internationally.

But Lang said he does not favor giving all business to the government-owned airline but allowing a variety of airlines to compete.

He said he would lean more toward changes as passenger business grew rather than switching existing routes and services from one airline to another.

Diet Aids Seen For Arthritics

TORONTO (CP) — A medical seminar was told that arthritic pain and stiffness can be reduced or eliminated when a patient does not eat food to which he is hypersensitive.

Dr. Murray Carroll, a family physician from Chadbourn, N.C., said that of 100 arthritis patients he studied, about half found some relief when certain foods were identified and reduced or removed from their diets.

He told a seminar sponsored by the Society of Clinical Ecology that 30 per cent of the patients improved substantially when their diets were changed.

Treatment begins with a fast of three to seven days which eliminates or reduces the symptoms of arthritis in most patients, he said.

No medication is allowed, except drugs for heart disease, diabetes and pain.

Dr. Carroll said various foods gradually are added to the patient's diet to determine which foods produce symptoms of arthritis in each patient.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

It is a normal tendency for most bridge players in the role of a declarer to initiate their attack by attempting to develop their longest suit first. More often than not, this approach is the winning one.

However, numerous situations develop where it is wrong to first attack the suit that will produce the "mostest" tricks. This fact our South declarer discovered belatedly in today's rubber-bridge deal.

Both sides vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♦.

East, put up the diamond ten on the opening lead and South captured the trick with his queen. He then led the queen of clubs and finessed against West's hoped-for king. Upon winning this trick, East returned the diamond eight. When South followed suit with the deuce, West overtook with the nine and played back the diamond jack, South winning with his ace.

At this point, South had eight winners, but when he eventually led a heart to obtain his ninth trick, West took the ace and cashed two more diamond tricks. Thus South lost three diamonds, a heart and a club.

As declarer should have viewed the play, the danger to his contract was that West would subsequently obtain the lead to cash his to-be-established diamond suit. If West had the club king, he would be finessed out of it. The only card with which West could obtain the elad (in theory) was the heart ace.

Hence, if West were the possessor of the heart ace, it was imperative that it be driven out immediately, before West's diamond suit became established. Therefore, at trick two, declarer should have attacked hearts. If West declined to win the initial heart lead, declarer could now guarantee his contract by switching over to the club suit, and making four clubs, two spades, two diamonds and one heart.

Assuming that West won the first heart lead (at trick two), he would continue diamonds, South winning the third lead with his ace. He would now take the club finesse, losing to East's king. With East having no more diamonds, South's contract would now be there for the taking.

Silvery-Grey Shrubs Have Role

Silvery grey shrub foliage is exploited for winter garden landscaping in some countries but here on the temperate Pacific Coast it is seen only in odd patches.

Perhaps the reason can be traced to our climate making it possible to have so many other foliage and flowering trees and shrubs to enjoy from November to April.

In a garden of any size from the door-yard plot of a row town house to the half acre home garden, grey shrub foliage contrasts its light and grace with the heavier evergreen shrubs.

Not only are the shrubs to be mentioned silvery in summer but are classed among the evergreens — keeping their leaves all winter. Though most decorative for their leaves, these shrubs have flowers too in summer.

First choice on all counts is a New Zealander, Senecio laxifolius. A plant native to the South Island (New Zealand) it is much hardier than the North Island Senecio greyi with which it is too often confused. Leaves are a little smaller, but over-all effect is lovely all year and S. laxifolius is winter hardy here.

All grey leaved plants show their best color when planted in sunny, well drained places; shrub shelter from winter wind (on northeast) is helpful.

This senecio will grow to four or five feet and flowers profusely in summer with inch wide yellow, daisy type flowers. The flower stems can be cut off as soon as seen if you have no liking for them. Doing so has no harmful effect on the shrub. It just goes on making more new growth shoots.

Easy enough to keep under control, S. laxifolius responds well to an over-all shearing in April.

Similar in cultural requirements are two other silver leafed shrubs, Senecio cineraria (maritima) and Santolina incana; this last is found listed also as S. chamaecyparissus. These two are from the Mediterranean shores.

Senecio cineraria is blessed with a beautifully architectural leaf — sculptured in its outline like an oakleaf. Santolina incana makes a dense silvery mound of stems covered with finely cut foliage.

In common with many silver leafed plants, these two have yellow daisy type flowers. I cut off the flower stems every year as they appear. The reason is that the silver foliage is lovely with the scarlet Escallonia C.F. Ball and an evergreen blue flowered Ceanothus thyrsiflorus (seedling) as background.

Yellow flowers would just confound the picture, so off they come before they open and results are good. New shoots are made freely in early summer and remain in lovely condition all winter.

Only once were these plants damaged by continued freezing weather; cut back to almost soil level, they made a fine recovery.

These two shrub plants are also easily controlled by April pruning. In fact their new summer color is improved. Leave enough woody stems on which the grey growth buds will already be visible.

One low growing grey shrub will be mentioned — not a silver grey but a blue grey. Hebe pageana grows no more than six inches high but a young plant spreads out well and can be pegged down.

This plant too has a doubtful name, for it is found listed either as H. pagei or H. pageana.

The blue grey little leaves are on small branching stems. In early May each stem ends in a small spike of tiny white flowers like late puffs of snow.

All these grey leafed shrubs serve a double role on the coast — with their color lightening dark green foliage of other coastal plants and as durable salt wind plants for gardens near the sea.

A gritty loam (no manure added, and no fertilizer) in a sunny spot with a shelter against the cold northeast winter wind, these are the needs for year 'round grey leafed garden plants.

INFLATABLE FABLE PART II

THE EARLIEST MATERIALS used for INFLATABLE BOATS were literally animal skins sealed with pitch. In some countries these are still in use. The Western World wanted something better. Rubberized fabrics were developed for Balloons and Airships and were also tried out in boats.

Stay tuned for further developments and don't miss the final solution at the INFLATABLE BOAT SHOW, Nov. 21-29 at 1208 Wharf St.

Heart Baby Lives

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Christopher Wall Jr. doesn't know it yet, but he has made medical history.

Of 64 cases recorded in the past 300 years, Christopher is the first infant to have lived more than two days with ectopia cordis — his heart developed outside his chest.

Christopher was three months old Monday. His heart, which at birth sat on top of his chest fully exposed, has been covered with skin and gradually is receding into his chest. Doctors say his chances for survival are "pretty good."

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Gov. George C. Wallace, pronounced himself "the people's choice" today and formally announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Blaming the pressures of show business for his recent bouts of erratic behavior, entertainer Charlie Rich has asked his fans to forgive him.

In an open letter to fan club members, the 1974 Country Music Entertainer of the Year said he has been sorting out his personal problems and "doing some serious thinking" about his life.

"The pressures on an entertainer's life are terrific," he explained. "What you have heard about 'the show must go on' is true. At times there was not enough of me to go around. Something had to give."

Rich's apology referred to his behavior during the nationally televised country music awards show last month, when he rambled through an awards presentation and ended up burning a card bearing John Denver's name.

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. — Richard Nixon is no longer bothered by the phlebitis condition which nearly killed him a year ago, he told a visitor Tuesday, and he now takes long walks, plays golf and swims every day.

WRITER PUNISHED

MOSCOW — The Soviet government published a decree today depriving dissident Soviet writer Vladimir Maximov, now living in Paris, of his Soviet citizenship for "actions harming the prestige of the Soviet Union."

Maximov, 43, widely considered one of the best authors writing in Russia today, left Moscow in March last year for a one-year visit to France at the invitation of the French literary PEN club.

He has since become a prominent figure in dissident emigre circles abroad.

Teachers, Trustees Meet For Bargaining Session

Teacher and trustee bargaining groups are meeting today in the first round of negotiations since federal wage and price controls were imposed last month.

Indications are teacher salary increases and increments must comply to the 10 per cent guidelines.

Reoresentatives of the B.C. School Teachers Federation went to Ottawa last week to get clarification and result of the meeting as outlined in a telegram to school boards from the BCSTA was:

"There is a possibility that experience increments may be included in the guidelines and not excluded as we had originally interpreted."

School boards will not get final notification until the federal bill gets royal assent possibly late November or even in December, about the time boards have to present their budgets for next year.

BCSTA president Mike Berg said in the memo that school boards and officers of boards paying more than the guidelines will be subject to prosecution, except in case of two boards which settled before the guidlines.

School boards were urged to offer the teachers a settlement based on the most conservative interpretation of the guidelines and if this is unacceptable boards should procede to arbitration.

On Oct. 16 the anti-inflation board issued a memo saying it is expected the parties will negotiate in good faith with a view to concluding agreements under the guidelines.

The Greater Victoria school board earlier had assessed that the guidelines would mean salary increases would be subject to the 10 per cent guidelines and increments would be calculated at an additional 3 per cent, making a total increase of 13 per cent. That, however, is subject to question.

Greater Victoria teachers and trustees are bargaining on a zonal basis and the Southern Vancouver Island zone includes Saanich, Sooke, Gulf Islands, Cowichan and North Cowichan.

Preliminary talks were scheduled early in October but later abandoned because clarification of guidelines were needed.

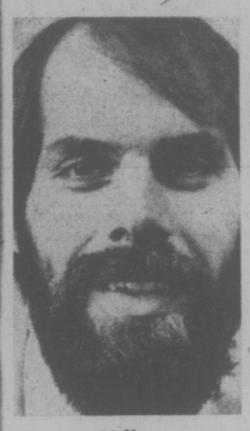
Private School Issue, Permissiveness Among Issues Facing Sooke Schools . . .

Haas



Killip

Fitton

Stephenson

Eight candidates, including four incumbents, are contesting the election for four seats in the Sooke School district.

The views and issues outlined by trustee hopefuls cover a wide variety of topics from the need for greater discipline in schools to the study of alternative schools for the district.

There are five candidates, including two incumbents, contesting the two seats in the Belmont zone and three candidates, including two incumbents, seeking the two seats in the Milnes Landing zone.

Following are their views. An x indicates incumbent.

MILNES LANDING ZONE
(2 seats)

PAULINE CHAMBERLAIN: Apparent apathy and unwillingness of people to get involved in school affairs prompted Mrs. Pauline Chamberlain to make an unsuccessful attempt to get on school board and she has decided to try again.

Mrs. Chamberlain who moved to the area seven years ago, after living in England and Arabia, worked as a substitute teacher in the district.

She has always had a "keen interest" in education and particularly wants to see a woman representative for the district's Milnes Landing zone. "I well know the sort of problems that we mothers have to face as our children grow up."

She says school boards get very involved in material issues and "I think that the welfare of the individual child is often forgotten."

Mrs. Chamberlain would like to see guidance courses initiated by the board as well as cultural instruction.

RONALD FITTON (X): Honest handling of public funds is the main plank in incumbent Ronald Fitton's platform.

During his years on the board he has been interested in education in the whole school district.

Other priorities are:

- Communication between the board, administration, teachers, students and parents;
- Steady improvement of school grounds for year-round use and more vocational training shops in the district's schools.

Fitton would like to see a program developed jointly with trade unions and management in the district to give youth wider experience with expensive machinery in high schools. Improvement of library facilities is also a goal.

WILLIAM JAMES STEPHENSON (X): A seven-year veteran as Sooke school trustee, William Stephenson has a keen interest in seeing the students of the district receive a top quality education and "all opportunities must be there as each student is an individual and must have a choice of paths to follow."

Stephenson, a millworker, will stand for re-election on the basis of past accomplishments in the board's direction of 21 schools, 8,050 students and more than 400 teachers.

The district is growing in population and "we must plan ahead for future growth. New ideas must be introduced and old ideas updated," he says.

He has participated in the buildings and grounds committee, responsible for completion of Edward Milne High School and the addition of the Elizabeth Fisher Library property has also been purchased on Goldstream for a new junior high school.

BELMONT ZONE
(2 seats)

BONNIE FOURNIER: Mrs. Bonnie Fournier is concerned with the "denial of self-expression" to students in the district.

A newcomer, she says "bright and imaginative children at the primary level are suddenly categorized and required to conform and this stunts their emotion growth . .

"Our youth should be permitted to let off steam constructively and artistically in the classroom, rather than negatively on the street therefore creating other problems for society to cope with."

Mrs. Fournier, a homemaker, would like to see more board action in the area of the special child be he gifted or handicapped.

She says the Public School Act is "depressingy outdated" and needs revision and updating.

NEEL HAAS (X): Mrs. Haas, an incumbent, wants to see the board's "open line" policy with its 15-minute question period at the start of board meetings continue.

She is most anxious to continue "nagging" all necessary quarters to have the new junior secondary school function within a year and relieve the bottleneck at Belmont Secondary.

Fundamentals in school instruction must come before an emphasis on creativity, says Mrs. Haas, who nevertheless would like to encourage study of the need for a structured and unstructured school in the district.

She is greatly disturbed by the number of students going to private schools for a more-structured learning environment.

FRANK HIRD-RUTTER: A return of discipline and direction in schools is Frank Hird-Rutter's prime goal. He says the move to a permissive school system has failed and pre-supposes that every teacher has a personal charisma which can hold the attention of the class through sheer personality.

Total co-operation of parents will be necessary to bring a return to a discipline "of mutual respect" and communications between the board students teachers and board, students, teachers and

JACK HANNAM: Teach-Jack Hannam wants adequate allowances for the purchase and maintenance of more sophisticated instructional aids to assist in teacher effectiveness.

He wants to see children receive emotional and social support in the classroom and teachers should allow children to make progress within their limitations.

He recommends that parents be invited to give classroom assistance and would like to see a system of school order, delivery and return of resource material set up on a regular basis.

Exceptional children should receive early recognition and assistance whatever their impediment, he says and educational planning should be done in conjunction with regional planning.

VRIAN KILLIP (X): A faculty member of the Camosun college business department, incumbent Brian Killip chaired the teacher salary negotiating team, the education committee and teacher liaison committee.

He wants to see the improvement of language skills, an evauation of secondary programs, better planning.

The board should also urge the streamlining of the education department to hasten the procedure for capital expenditures. A delay of one year in new secondary school negotiations resulted in $250,000 increased costs. "This is unacceptable."

The board should attempt to combine community services within schools to make schools become focal points of the community and avoid duplication. Parents should also have a voice in board's activities, says Killip.

42 More Counsellors

An additional 42 senior citizen counsellors have been appointed around the province.

The additions bring the total volunteer force to 160 people who help senior citizens and are paid out-of-pocket expenses up to $60 a month by the provincial government.

Human Resources Minister Norm Levi said local MLAs were asked to make suggestions for additional appointments to the service which began in 1968.

Victoria now has nine counsellors and a departmental official said neither of Victoria's MLAs recommended any new people for the job.

The counsellors generally drive elderly people to their doctors or the hospital, assist in developing housing projects and activity centres, help with meals - on - wheels programs and write letters for those who have difficulty writing.

Conference On Family Next Week

About 200 political, social and religious leaders will gather in Victoria next week for a conference on the family.

The first four-day phase of the conference begins Monday, Nov. 17, at Centennial United Church and 150 delegates with 40 "resource persons" from the province will be attending.

Human Resources Minister Norm Levi explained the conference is being provincially funded and hopes it will result in new policies and initiatives in the family law and programs.

The second phase of the conference will be neighborhood discussions held throughout January and February and the third phase, a meeting to distill the findings of neighborhood groups, will be held late in the year.

OUSTER PROTESTS BACK WHITLAM

Australia in Turmoil

Police, protesters battle in Canberra

Times News Services

CANBERRA — Malcolm Fraser named a caretaker Australian cabinet today amid widespread demonstrations and calls for a general strike in support of ousted Gough Whitlam, ousted as Labor prime minister.

Slipping into Parliament house through a side door, Fraser's cabinet was sworn in while the chanting of pro-Whitlam demonstrators rang through the building.

Whitlam meanwhile, told a crowd of 3,000 in front of the building that his removal Tuesday by Gov.-Gen. Sir John Kerr "makes a travesty of parliamentary democracy in Australia."

Kerr also dissolved Parliament in preparation for election of a new House of Representatives and Senate. The election is to be held on Dec. 13, and the makeup of the new lower house will determine whether Whitlam, 59, returns to power or Fraser, 45, remains in office.

Informed sources in the ousted Labor government said today there was no doubt that if Labor is re-elected next month, Whitlam, would demand Kerr's resignation or dismiss him out of hand.

Under the Australian constitution, however, the government has no power to abolish Kerr's office without a national referendum amending the constitution.

As the Queen's representative, Kerr bestows commissions on all elected ministers, including the prime minister, and is considerd the guardian of the Australian constitution.

The unprecedented decision to oust Whitlam touched off street protests, wildcat strikes and political mud-slinging.

Militant union leaders declared war on Fraser and urged workers to take to the streets around the country to protest against his Conservative Party government.

But businessmen in Sydney toasted the fall of Whitlam's Labor party government with champagne Tuesday and the stock market scored its biggest one-day gain in a year.

Whitlam met his closest advisers today to arrange his campaign intinerary for next month's election. Fraser had a busy first day in office planning tactics with Conservatve leaders.

The governor-general said he replaced Whitlam with Fraser because of the ousted prime minister's refusal to resign or call new elections after the senate turned down the 1975-76 budget.

The rejection of the budget and Whitlam's insistence on staying in office touched off a month-long constitutional crisis that left the treasury short of money for welfare and government paycheques.

Whitlam, in a foretaste of the political mud-slinging expected during the campaign, said Fraser would go down in

Creighton To Quit United Way

Hugh Creighton, executive director of the United Way in Greater Victoria, confirmed today he will leave his position at the end of the current campaign.

Creighton, 39, and a chartered accountant, said he would rather not comment on reasons for the move now. He has held the post for 3½ years.

"My concern right now is we have a successful campaign. That's the important thing because it affects all the agencies," he said.

The annual campaign, which this year has a target of $650,000 in support of 24 agencies, is currently under way and lagging behind.

Oak Bay Ald. Shirley Dowell, president of United Way, said today she got Creighton's letter of resignation in September and she understands he is resigning because he wants to move into a vocation where he can stay for the rest of his working lifetime.

There's never been any conflict between him and the board. He's worked well with the board," she said.

The matter of Creighton's impending resignation has not been brought up by her before now, she said, because it is the middle of the current campaign "and in case people read something into it that wasn't there."

Teenage Curfews Imposed

Times News Services

SURREY — This community and Maple Ridge have each imposed 11 p.m. curfews on teenagers.

Violation of curfew in each town carries $5 fine.

The curfew here applies to 15-year-olds and under. The one in Maple Ridge to 17-year-olds and under.

Surrey council also voted to ask the provincial government to remove the $5 fine limit to permit a more reasonable penalty.

The bylaws permit police to take curfew offenders to their homes or to jail for a couple of hours.

Surrey council also voted Tuesday to halt welfare payments after two weeks instead of the present four weeks for employable welfare recipients who are awaiting unemployment insurance benefits.

The action followed a report from Mayor Bill Vander Zalm which said welfare rolls in that Vancouver suburb have increased 65 per cent since last fall.

The number of applications for welfare is phenomenal, he said, and due largely to the high rate of unemployment.

Council was told the reduction to two weeks from four weeks could save the municipality $20,000 a month.

Candidate Platforms

Platforms of candidates involved in civic election campaigns for the regional board, Sidney mayor's seat and Sooke School District are detailed on page 5, 58 and 59 today as part of the Times series on the civic election.

Policies of the six people squared off in the Esquimalt aldermanic race are reported on Page 42.

October Jobless Rate Stays at 14-Year High

OTTAWA (CP) — The national unemployment rate remained virtually unchanged at a 14-year high in October, although it jumped in five provinces.

The B.C. jobless rate dropped one percentage point to 8.6 per cent but the number of unemployed was 97,000 up from 72,000 on October 1974. The provincial unemployment rate one year ago was 6.5 per cent.

Statistics Canada reported today that 7.2 per cent of the labor force was unemployed in October, the same percentage rate as September.

It was the eighth consecutive month the rate has been more than seven per cent, the worst jobless level in 14 years. It is widely predicted to get worse before it gets better.

There were fewer seeking work in October, but also few jobs were available.

On an actual basis, 576,000 persons were officially unemployed in October.

On a seasonally-adjusted basis, the jobless rate for those 24 and younger increased four-tenths of one percentage point to 12.9 per cent. The rate declined however to 4.9 per cent from 5.2 per cent for men aged 25 and older and dropped to 4.2 per cent from 4.6 per cent for women of the same age.

Among the increases for the five provinces, the sharpest jump was in New Brunswick, where the rate rose by 2.2 percentage points to 12.6 per cent.

Newfoundland retained the highest jobless level in the country at 19.6 per cent, up from 18.8 per cent in September.

The rate remained steady in Alberta at 3.4 per cent — the lowest in the country — and in Ontario, where it stood at 5.8 per cent of the labor force.

In Quebec it declined to 9.1 from 9.3 per cent.

The Saskatchewan rate jumped 1.6 percentage points to 3.5 per cent; Manitoba was up one-half a percentage point to four per cent and the Nova Scotia rate increased to 8.5 from 8.1 per cent.

POTASH TAKEOVER

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan's New Democratic government announced today that it will soon move to acquire ownership of at least half and possibly all of the provincial potash industry, using expropriation if necessary.

"I am confident that in the years ahead this will be seen as one of the best investments the people of this province have ever made," Premier Allan Blakeney told reporters as he commented on new policies outlined in the throne speech opening the province's 18th legislature.

The premier said the takeovers would certainly exceed $500 million and could approach $1 billion, depending on the compensation that is arbitrated and the actual number of mines acquired.

BeCems Backs CUPW

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

B.C.'s emergency mail service (BeCems) will be abandoned if the federal government doesn't start bargaining in better faith with striking postal workers, organizer George Ferguson of Victoria said today.

Ferguson, who started BeCems Oct. 21, said he is "ashamed of my government."

He said the postal workers are becoming whipping boys of the government in its attack on inflation. The public has been "led along a path of subtle dishonesty."

"I don't believe the average citizen is aware of the plight of the postal workers in their struggle with the government for a fair wage settlement."

He said his mail service was intended to merely fill a short-term gap. He believed at the time a settlement would have been worked out within days of the calling of a strike.

"However," he said, "the government through Postmaster Bryce Mackasey has determined to deal postal workers a severe blow."

He said that on Monday he contacted Stan Darlington, Victoria president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, and offered once again to turn his business over to the strikers.

He said Darlington appeared pleased to receive his support, but he demurred on the question of taking over BeCems.

The postal union has steadfastly refused to become involved in private mail services because it believes that would weaken its position and prolong the strike.

Darlington was in Campbell River today and not available for comment.

Ferguson said he would make available to the union all of the profits from his mail service which in the past week has mushroomed.

He noted that on Monday alone he received orders to deliver 12,000 pieces of mail for two Victoria businesses. The total exceeds the orders BeCems received for the first four days of last week.

He said his company is deli-

Letter Carriers To Deliver Cheques

Times News Service

The post office will call in letter carriers for at least one day to ensure that millions of federal cheques are delivered in areas where people receive home delivery.

The post office confirmed today establishment of the contingency plan to distribute the cheques within the next two weeks if the current postal strike continues.

Those who get mail at post office boxes or general delivery are advised to pick up their cheques in the normal fashion.

A post office spokesman said the cheques have been split into two groups, the first of which is in the hands of the post office today. They would be distributed to provincial capitals and would be ready for delivery by Nov. 19.

The first group of cheques which should be delivered or available for pickup by the end of next week includes old-age security cheques, Canada Pension Plan cheques, RCMP pensions, MP pensions, judges' pensions, armed forces pensions and public service super-annuation cheques.

The second group, to be available for delivery or pick-up on or about Nov. 26 includes family allowance cheques, war veterans' allowances and miscellaneous government cheques.

The cheques will be delivered presorted to the post office by the department of supply and services and then distributed to provincial capitals. From there they will be sent to the city, town or area of final destination, the post office spokesman said.

He said sorting will be handled by supervisory staff or by Canadian Union of Postal Workers (CUPW) members who have crossed picket lines.

Meanwhile, the post office reported more CUPW members had returned to their jobs and letter carriers were being called back to work in centres in Nova Scotia, Ontario and some western centres where inside workers have returned. Eighty-four post offices, mostly in small centres, were reported open compared with 68 Monday.

Gals Who Wear Glasses . . .

TORONTO (CP) — Nancy Gelfand, 26, of Montreal was told by an Olympic Games official last week that she would not be hired as a hostess for the games because she wears glasses, according to the Globe and Mail.

The newspaper quotes Mrs. Gelfand, a bilingual master of arts student, as saying that when she became angry at the employment interviewer, he told her the official policy was also against hiring unattractive women.

However, Orphila Plouffe, director of hostesses, said an applicant's appearance is not particularly important and that there is no official ruling on glasses, the newspaper said.

It says Mrs. Gelfand was particularly angry at the interviewer's decision because she worked as a hostess at Expo '67 in Montreal and fulfilled all advertised qualifications for a games hostess.

The newspaper quotes Richard Carriere, employment interviewer, as saying that Olympics officials frown upon hiring bespectacled women because uniform hats do not look attractive with glasses.

Slide Hits Pt. Alice

A mud slide struck the mill town of Port Alice on northern Vancouver Island shortly before noon today but an early report from RCMP there said no one was killed or injured.

Rayonier operates a mill in the community of about 1,800 and a company spokesman said the slide came after five inches of rain in the past 14 hours. Rain was continuing to fall at the rate of half-an-inch an hour.

Details of where the slide hit or the amount of damage weren't available but the spokesman said part of the town had been evacuated to a community centre so a head count could be taken.

A similar mud slide caused an estimated $500,000 damage in December 1973, without injuring anyone.

Gorst Dumped in Bitter NDP Meeting

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Incumbent Esquimalt MLA Jim Gorst was dumped from the NDP slate at an angry, often bitter nomination meeting Tuesday night.

By a margin of eight votes, party members decided to drop Gorst in favor of 49-year-old Esquimalt police sergeant Frank Mitchell, who will now face Social Credit nominee Lyle Kahl in the Dec. 11 provincial election.

Kahl, a 36-year-old schoolteacher, won the Socred nomination Monday night in a seven-way fight which saw former Esquimalt Socred MLA Herb Bruch defeated on the first ballot.

Gorst, who ended Brueh's 19-year term as MLA in the NDP's 1972 election sweep, seemed a little surprised and hurt at his own defeat Tuesday.

Telling reporters later he did not want to do more damage by discussing the bloodletting, Gorst then went on to say the meeting had obviously been orchestrated.

"Nothing just happens — everything is orchestrated. If you want to be king or queen you have to do something — dethrone someone," he said.

Throughout the three-hour meeting, Mitchell and other party executive accused Gorst of not serving his constituency well, of not answering telephone calls and mail, not dealing with local problems and not attending executive meetings.

Gorst said he had helped "thousands of people" in the constituency and called the charges "innuendo and half-truth . . . undocumented, unsubstantiated and unfounded."

Premier Barrett and NDP president Yvonne Cocke had nothing to do with the upset, said Gorst, despite Mitchell's reference to phone calls from both party officials assuring him they were not opposed to a contest because "the membership must decide who has the credentials to run."

Gorst said he did not know what he will do after Dec. 11, when he ceases to be MLA for the area, but pledged he would work for Mitchell's campaign "if asked."

He called on the audience to get behind Mitchell but his words were barely heard as his angry supporters left the crowded Esquimalt Recreation Centre auditorium.

The vote was 74-to-66 and crowd appeared fairly evenly split between the two men during the speeches and half-hour question period which was studded with cat-calls and jeering as Mitchell supporters, mostly party executive members, queried Gorst's performance.

One woman angrily asked Mitchell about his departure from the party in 1969, when Gorst first got the NDP nomination, and Mitchell admitted he became inactive at

Pulp-mill smoke hanging over city can be seen well before Coho docks

So Like Canada . . . But a Real Feeling Of Setting Down in Foreign Country

(Second of three)

PORT ANGELES — Strange how places like people can be alike and yet so different.

Take this little place.

You slop across the Juan de Fuca Strait (a pleasant hour and-a-half trip from Victoria in the MV. Coho if the sea is kind and doesn't toss you about too much) and you find a city quite like cities in Canada and yet so American in many ways.

Just as in B.C., the forest is everywhere. It's on the slopes of the nearby Olympic Mountains. It's in the logs piled high on the shore or floating in the water. And it's in the very air you breathe, A cloud of smoke from a nearby pulp mill hangs low over the city. The smell of cedar never leaves. And a sign reminds you: you're in "Port Angeles, where the timber is wealth."

The day after I crossed the Strait, there was no wind and it was a delicious 63 degrees Fahrenheit. And, as I got warmer by walking round, it was as though I were spending the day in a cedar-lined sauna bath. But on the second day, it clouded over, rained a little and a cruel wind whipped the sea into a fury and sent the temperature tumbling to a more-like-Vancouver-Island 47.

Everywhere there are reminders of the nearness and closeness of Canada.

From tiny Haynes Park, which overlooks the harbor and the Strait, you gaze past Ediz Hook with its long roadway and clutter of U.S. Coast Guard buildings to a blur on the horizon. You know that's home and that you're really not very far away.

Just in front of you there's a mini Peace Arch put there by the Lions Clubs of British Columbia, Washington and Northern Idaho and bearing the inscription: "In friendship we serve."

Nearby there's a sign that says: "Across the Strait of Juan de Fuca 18 miles is Victoria. On clear days one can see the buildings of the city."

And at night the lights of the city wink at you kind of symbolically.

Quite a number of people living here, or so I was told, were born in Canada. Many came here because they're married to Americans. Both of the firms involved in the two biggest industries here — pulp (Rayonier) and paper (Crown Zellerbach) — have mills in Canada. So there's a familiar feeling.

And yet there's a feeling of difference, too. That feeling you get somehow of being in a foreign country.

Though the population is only a modest 16,250 and the traffic is not heavy, the two main streets are one-way. First Street runs one-way to the east, and Front Street runs one-way to the west. At each end and in between there are numerous joining streets, but most of the traffic seems to travel up First Street and then back down Front Street. And after some time you emerge a little giddy, as if getting off a carousel.

But the cars don't speed. Or at least I haven't seen them speeding. In fact, I was quite surprised to find that everyone seems to keep within the posted 25 mph limit. And they actually stop in plenty of time when they see an orange traffic light. And that's un-Canadian to start with.

Then there are all those taverns. You see Babe's Tavern almost as soon as you get off the ferry and in the space of one block on Front Street there are the Thunderbird Tavern, Chinook Tavern, M and C Tavern and Harbor Tavern. Up on First Street, there are the Port Angeles Pub and the Little Brick Tavern, curiously standing almost next door to the Salvation Army.

Port Angeles—A pub and salvation

And there are the people themselves who, although living so close to Canada, are very American. The dress, especially of the women, is even more casual than north of the border and to a visitor there's the greeting of "Howdy" and with it a much slower, unhurried way of speaking.

Many people here visit Canada quite regularly and to them Victoria is somewhere different, a bit of an oddity, a "fun" place.

One man told me he and his wife go to Victoria "eight or 10 times a year" and like to shop there, particularly for gifts, because of the vast range of imported goods.

"We have found the business people we deal with in Victoria unusually friendly," he said. "And we look forward to seeing them each visit."

The couple said, too, they often try to take in a play at the McPherson or see the museum, which they think is "great."

And a waitress in a coffee bar said she goes over to Victoria about once a year.

"Not for anything special," she explained with a smile, "just for the change — to goof off a bit."

City manager Ken Whorton, who came to Washington three years ago from California, has been to Victoria twice in the last year and "thoroughly enjoyed it there."

"We have a very strong relationship in the point of view of being gateway cities in both cases," Whorton said in an interview. "We have an exceptionally high tourist trade through here in the summer and most people coming back from Victoria say the Canadians treated them very well."

The city manager said both cities tend to have a feeling of isolation and this formed a common bond.

"You're on an island and we're isolated, too," he said. "Don't get me wrong, though. I think most people enjoy this feeling of isolation.

"Frankly though, I find Victoria much more enjoyable after the tourist season," confessed Whorton. "Then, when the Canadian people have more time, they enjoy talking to you and discussing things.

"We think a lot of Victoria and we enjoy the cosmopolitan atmosphere you people are able to create over there.

"You know," he adds with a big grin, "it's funny but when people here have relatives visiting from other parts of the States, they tell them 'you mustn't go home before you visit Victoria.'"

Gov't Steps Into Fight To Save Home

A temporary restraint order under the Archeological and Historic Sites Protection Act has been issued by Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall for the dwelling at 821 Burdett.

The move follows an earlier stop work order by the city engineer to halt demolition at the last remaining downtown example of a Samuel Maclure-designed home.

Almost in perfect state of preservation outwardly, the building is owned by Park Pacific Apartments Ltd. and is to be wrecked to make way for future development.

Some demolition work had started while five tenants still occupied the six-suite building, and to protect these people the engineer stopped work.

Past president Terry Rekston, of the Hallmark Society, said the provincial secretary's order will permit the measuring, recording and photographing of the home with a view to assessing its value as a potential historic site.

Earlier, Park Pacific president Robert McAdams said his firm was in no rush to tear down the building and he would be prepared to cooperate with the Hallmark Society or others interested in finding a way to save the structure.

The demolition, which one tenant called harassment, proceeded despite McAdams' statement.

BOARD LOOKING AT SUSPENSION

The Capital Regional Board reviewed behind closed doors today the case of one of its health inspectors, suspended earlier for allegedly offering gratuitous election advice.

Robert Bradbury, 26, a health inspector in Saanich, was suspended from his $1,200-a-month job by board chairman Jim Campbell.

Campbell declined to comment on the case before he reported to the board. But other sources indicated there was a complaint Bradbury had told a caller complaining about a blocked sewer line that one solution would be to vote in a certain way in Saturday's Saanich council election.

100 Protest Marina Plan At Sidney

More than 100 residents jammed Sidney council chamber Monday, many of them to protest rezoning of 9.6 acres of waterlot for a private marina.

Public hearing on the proposal was moved into the town firehall in view of the turnout which attracted professional briefs from the Yacht Clubs Association of B.C., the federal department of environment, a biologist, the developer and consultant engineer Ker Priestman and Associates.

Council tabled the matter for further discussion after points were raised that had not been previously entered, but Ald. Peter Malcolm said council generally is favorable to the concept.

Malcolm said aldermen do not like the idea of rezoning such a choice piece of waterfront land that would automatically raise its market value without any development work being done. Also, he said, there is no guarantee of federal government participation in a breakwater that would be necessary to make the marina a year-round facility.

Meanwhile, John Salvador, one of a group of concerned upland property owners, said a petition against the marina will be delivered to council. He said it contains names of about 25 businesses and 150 residents from various parts of Sidney.

They are not opposed to waterfront development, but they state that in the interests of the community this land should remain in control of the Crown.

Salvador said the proposal by Island View Marina Development company is basically the same as presented two years ago, at which time council rejected it.

The petition argues that if federal aid is given to a private undertaking there would be little hope of obtaining such help to provide "a total marine development" offering shelter to the entire harbor and not just to one marina.

Such a proposal is of long standing, the petitioners say, and would provide Sidney with "a fabulous public harbor with adjacent private marine, shopping and recreational facilities."

Petitioners also want to know what is contained in the developer's impact assessment before a decision is made by council.

Other points raised by the petition include parking facilities, small boat launching ramp, use of the public beach adjoining the site, space for visiting yachts, traffic congestion, water supply and a current ban on apartments and multiple dwellings.

Candidate Kennedy Returns

The 12th candidate for Greater Victoria school board, who has remained a mystery since nomination day, has finally surfaced.

Michael Joseph Patrick Kennedy said he was called out of town because of a death in the family and returned Sunday.

He plans to start door-knocking today to gather support.

Kennedy, 44, a janitor, moved Nov. 1 from the residence listed on his nomination papers to 120 Gorge Road.

He's running because he's "tired of seeing nothing done in the school district. There seems to be a stalemate — and there hasn't been any improvement in education."

Schools should get back to the basics of English, math and science and if children want to take a course in sociology it should be optional, says Kennedy, who has two children in school.

He also feels that speed limits in school zones should be more strictly enforced and drivers who break the limits should face stiff fines.

'GUARDIAN ANGEL' SAVED HIM

William Scott Phemister must have had "a guardian angel riding on his shoulder," Central Saanich police said today.

Phemister, 23, of Sidney, is in Resthaven Hospital recovering from a broken ankle and scrapes to his face and leg, the only injurjes he received after being hurled more than 200 feet through the air after his camper van crashed into a highway divider at Pat Bay and Mount Newton Road at 5:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Police said the van was demolished and about $1,200 damage done to highways signs and poles.

Identity Problems for Candidate

Car dealer Edgar Rhomberg seems to have had difficulty choosing a party banner to match his political aspirations.

Rhomberg, 4513 Tanglewood, has announced he will seek the Liberal nomination in Saanich and The Islands, but the decision came after he gave the Conservatives a good look too.

A Tory spokesman said Rhomberg was trying to get the Tory nomination last week, "but because we've never heard very much of him and he was a stranger, we turned him down."

Barbara Butler said today executive members chuckled when they heard Rhomberg is now seeking the Liberal nomination.

Word came the day they received Rhomberg's application for Tory membership.

"I guess we'll place it in the stack of memoirs from this election," she said.

Asked about his party affiliations, Rhomberg confirmed he will seek the Liberal nomination at a meeting likely to be held next week.

Rhomberg said he has been a Liberal member since 1970.

"I feel it's a viable alternative to the far left and the far right," he said, adding he could be described as a "long-time" Grit.

Concerning the Tories, he said: "I didn't feel at home in that party.

"Everybody has to take a look at who is going to capture six or seven seats in the election," he said, explaining his party rationale.

ESCAPERS CAUGHT

Two youths who walked away from the minimum-security corrections centre at Jordan River early Sunday were recaptured by RCMP Tuesday afternoon in Duncan.

Melvin Jones, 18, and Harry Puglas, 17, were kept overnight in the Duncan police lockup and are expected to be transferred to Victoria today where they will appear in provincial court charged with escape and being unlawfully at large.

Sheila Thomas and her "money-makers"

It's Not Gold but It Glitters

The way Sheila Thomas sees it Olympic Coins are one of the best investments.

An information officer with the federal Olympic Coins program, she was in town this week trumpeting the program initiated last May to help pay for the Olympics, support Canadian Olympians, and educate the public about Canadian athletes.

She'll be back Dec. 4-9 to extend that message directly to the people of Greater Victoria when the program's travelling sport art show opens in the Mayfair Shopping Centre.

The show features the largest collection of sport art ever assembled in Canada.

When it ends next July 1 in Montreal it will have visited 31 Canadian and four U.S. cities, have travelled 15,712 miles, and been seen by more than 10 million people. The show is coming to only three B.C. centres — Victoria, Vancouver and Kelowna.

Most of the 130 exhibits are on loan from the National Sport and Recreation Centre in Ottawa and include paintings, photographs and sculptures of Canada's foremost athletes. Among them is the late Lester Patrick of Victoria, hockey's "Silver Fox."

But the real stars, in this show at least, are the coins — heralded "the most beautiful money, money can buy".

The Canadian Mint is making 28 coins in seven series in honor of the Olympics continuing a 2,000-year tradition of commemorative Olympic coinage. The first six series are completed and will be on display. The seventh will be available early next year. One and a quarter-million sets of the seven series are being produced.

Each series consists of four coins — two $10 and two $5 — and each depicts a different sports theme. The $5 coin costs $8, the $10 coin, $15.75. The coins are legal tender in Canada — at their face value.

More than 50 countries are participating in the sale of the coins, the first time Olympic coins have been sold worldwide. In one Latin American country a special act had to be passed to permit their sale.

So far $130 million worth of coins have been sold, realizing a $35 million profit which will help defray construction costs at the Montreal Olympic site. More than half the Canadian sales have come from the west.

In addition three per cent of the money gained from the sales — about one and a quarter-million dollars — has gone to Olympic associations in each participating country.

Olympic Coins hope to raise $100 million for the Games and Miss Thomas is confident that goal will be reached.

The reason is the coins can't help but appreciate in value.

From a practical standpoint they are sound investment, she says, for each coin contains 92.5 per-cent pure British sterling silver.

And from a collector's standpoint they are a certain money-maker. She points out the 10-Deutschmark coin struck for the 1972 Munich Games originally sold for $3.50 and now sells for $1, while the 1,000-yen coin made for the 1964 Tokyo Games currently sells for $35, more than 10 times its original value.
